House 128-29, gave near final approval to and sent to the Senate an estimated $22.5 billion fiscal 2004 state budget. The package does not raise taxes but makes major cuts in many areas including human service programs, education and local aid. Supporters said the package is a balanced one that makes tough choices in light of the state's fiscal crisis and would close the state's estimated $3 billion budget deficit. Some opponents said the budget makes too many cuts in important programs and will hurt many citizens across the state. Others said they were pleased that the package adopts many of Governor Romney's and the Republicans' proposals but noted they voted against it because of the unfair procedural maneuvers that Speaker Finneran and the Democratic leadership used to block consideration of some of the governor's other initiatives. (A "Yea" vote is for the budget. A "Nay" vote is against it).

SELL NAMING RIGHTS TO STATE PARKS (H 4000)

House 86-71, approved an amendment requiring the Department of Parks and Recreation to develop guidelines and criteria on the possible sale of naming rights for state forests, parks and recreational facilities and to issue a report and recommendation to the legislature by November 15, 2003. Amendment supporters said this would simply look into the feasibility of selling these rights and argued that this may a creative way for the state to generate revenue. Some amendment opponents simply poked fun at the idea while others said the plan is well-intentioned but misguided and unnecessary. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment to establish guidelines and criteria. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).

WORK REQUIREMENTS FOR WELFARE MOTHERS (H 4000)

House 106-51, approved an amendment requiring welfare mothers with children between the ages of two and six to work 20 hours per week or work ten hours per week and obtain ten weekly hours of education and training. The amendment also shifts $5 million from the welfare payment program to a child-care program for welfare recipients. Amendment supporters said that the state would fund day care for these children and argued that the work and education/training combination will help these mothers move ahead with their lives and eventually get off the welfare rolls. Amendment opponents said the amendment is a "feel good" but impractical and unrealistic proposal that will not accomplish its intention. They noted that there are rarely jobs available for only ten hours per week and argued that the education and training budget has been cut from $29 million to $9 million and will not accommodate these mothers. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment imposing the new requirement. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).

DELINQUENT TAXPAYERS ON INTERNET (H 4000)

House 130-28, approved an amendment requiring the state to post on its website, at least once a year, the names and addresses of delinquent taxpayers who have owed the state more than $25,000 for at least six months. The amendment exempts some delinquents including those who have a payment agreement with the state and those who are appealing their cases. Other provisions include allowing the Revenue Commissioner to also publish the list in any print and electronic media and requiring that a notice be sent to the taxpayer at least 60 days prior to the public disclosure of the information. Amendment supporters said this cyber shame will help the state collect more than $450 million in delinquent taxes and noted that other states that have done this have realized a 15 percent collection on back taxes. Some amendment opponents said this type of humiliation is inappropriate and unfair. Others argued this proposal is risky and could hurt an innocent person with the same common first and last name as a delinquent taxpayer. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment requiring the posting of the names on the state's website. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).

EXEMPT SPECIAL EDUCATION STUDENTS FROM MCAS (H 4000)

House 117-37, approved an amendment allowing school committees to vote to award high school diplomas to special education students who have met all graduation requirements except for passing the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System (MCAS) test. Amendment supporters said the youngsters who have failed are mostly special needs students and noted that this exemption is reasonable and fair because these kids have worked extremely hard against many odds to fulfill all the other requirements. They argued that the state's policies should respect these special circumstances. Amendment opponents said more than 70 percent of special needs students have passed the MCAS exam and noted it is important to hold everyone to the same standard while providing them with the support they need. They agued that this is the first step toward abolishing the MCAS requirement and expressed concern that some parents would try to enroll their kids in special education in order to avoid the requirement. (A "Yea" vote is for the special education exemption. A "Nay" vote is against it).

CONTINUE UNTIL MIDNIGHT

House 108-56, suspended the House rules to allow last Tuesday's session to continue until midnight instead of ending at 9 p.m. Rule suspension supporters said it is important to continue action on the state budget in order to get it over to the Senate and eventually have a budget signed by the governor prior to the start of the fiscal year on July 1. Rule suspension opponents said it is irresponsible to hold late night sessions when legislators are exhausted and taxpayers are asleep. (A "Yea" vote is for continuing the session until 12 midnight. A "Nay" vote is against continuing it).

HIGHER EDUCATION AND BULGER'S OFFICE (H 4000)

House 109-46, approved a consolidated higher education amendment that restores some higher education funding, includes a section reducing the funding for University of Massachusetts President Billy Bulger's office by $1 million and provides that the money be used for scholarships for low income and disadvantaged UMass students. The section also calls for a study of the structure and governance of UMass and a review of Governor Romney's proposed reorganization of the entire higher education system. The amendment was offered by the chair of the Education Committee and its approval precluded the offering of other amendments including a Republican proposal to eliminate Bulger's office and pay for scholarships with the $14 million the governor estimates is used to operate Bulger's offices. Amendment supporters said this compromise will cut some of Bulger's funding, help UMass students who need financial aid and ensure that possible future cuts and/or reforms in Bulger's office and the entire higher education system are looked at rationally in the future and not in the present politically charged atmosphere. Some amendment opponents said they voted against the amendment because they support eliminating Bulger's duplicative and unnecessary office and noted that chancellors already run the various individual UMass campuses. Others said they opposed the amendment because they disliked the anti-democratic and unfair maneuver that precluded a vote on a separate amendment to eliminate Bulger's office. Some said the amendment simply does not restore enough of the money cut from the higher education system. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment including a $1 million cut in Bulger's office. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).

No checks and balances with Mass. legislators' pay

HEDLUND REPORT

BOB HEDLUND

Just as debate was beginning in the House of Representatives regarding a budget full of spending cuts that will result in more than 5,000 lost jobs, legislators passed an amendment giving themselves sole power over the bonus salaries given out to their fellow favored members. Up until passage of this legislation, any increase or decrease in the bonus pay of legislators had to be approved by the governor. This system has served the legislature without problem for more than 200 years. Of the 49 states with a bicameral legislature similar to Massachusetts, no other state legislature has ever adopted a law similar to this. Yet, with little study the Massachusetts legislature exempted itself from the system of checks and balances that is the foundation of our democracy.

The swift passage of this bill is just another blow to the already fragile credibility of the Massachusetts legislature. Massachusetts legislators are already paid the sixth highest in the nation, and, as we are the only state with Constitutionally guaranteed pay adjustments, we're ensured that our salaries will just keep on climbing. As belt tightening is occurring in most other areas of state government and within our own homes, the legislature continues to fatten itself, as its largesse knows no bounds.

In addition, I just wanted to relay to you some other important happenings on Beacon Hill:

• House budget pPassed with token debate

The House of Representatives recently passed its nearly $23 billion budget proposal, which was released on April 23. The proposal either ignored or watered down most of the reform ideas Governor Romney presented in his budget, and subsequently results in even more cuts to our cities and towns. Even more outrageous is the manner in which the Representatives are debating this year's budget. Instead of holding budget debate on the floor of the House in plain view of the public, House leadership has decided to hold the bulk of the debate behind closed doors. Then, after some backroom dealing an agreement is hammered out, a consolidated amendment emerges and is quickly adopted after only token debate.

This process is wrong, and it just goes to confirm the legislature's lack of respect for the citizens of Massachusetts. While the legislature proposes a budget that would eliminate more than 5,000 jobs across the Commonwealth, they have retained all of the perks and excesses for which they have become notorious. It is clear that through its many actions to date that the legislature is not serious about ridding Massachusetts of waste and patronage that exists in our government. When the budget comes up in the Senate, I will demand a full, honest and above all public debate over how we will spend nearly $23 billion of taxpayer money.

• Prescription Advantage

The House of Representatives released its budget without funding for the highly innovate Prescription Advantage program that provides prescription drug coverage for Massachusetts seniors. I strongly believe that is the wrong thing to do, and I have submitted testimony calling for the continuation and support of Prescription Advantage. I am also in full support of Governor Romney's efforts to secure federal funding in order to stabilize the critical program. While we should know the results of those efforts shortly, I am hopeful that in the meantime the Senate's budget will not ignore this program and will provide a viable solution.

• Local hearings on Chapter 40B

I have arranged for the legislature's Housing Committee to hold four public hearings in my district later this month on proposed changes to Chapter 40B. This will offer residents an opportunity to voice their opinions on this controversial issue. In addition, I have recently authored a letter in conjunction with Rep. Bradley, D-Hingham, which calls in the governor to order the Housing Appeals Committee to cease rulings overriding the votes of a town board. I have asked that the governor put this "freeze" in place until the legislature has time to act upon current 40B legislation and the pending recommendations of recently created Chapter 40B task force.

• Hedlund calls for elimination of Governor's Council

I have co-sponsored a bill that would call for the elimination of the Governor's Council and the transfer of its authority over confirmation of judges and commutations to the state Senate. This bill would save the commonwealth hundreds of thousands of dollars, and would also increase the accountability in judicial appointments. The Governor's Council is a relic of colonial times, which was created to serve as a check to the governor who was then appointed for the King of England. Over the years, it has been stripped of much of its power, and it now is the time for the council to be eliminated completely.

• Tunnel naming

In another example of the legislature's misplaced priorities, members of Senate and House leadership are working hard in order to see that the newly opened Central Artery Tunnel is named for former Speaker of the House "Tip" O'Neill. Governor Romney recently filed legislation that would provide the moniker of "Liberty Tunnel" while naming a smaller portion of the project for the former speaker. It's only fitting that the legislature would want to name the tunnel for a man who was renowned for wasteful spending, patronage and huge federal deficits. As an alternative, I have proposed that the tunnel be named for those who truly paid for its completion by naming it "Taxpayer's Tunnel."

• Veteran's bill

The House and Senate recently passed legislation with my support that would supplement the salaries of state employees currently serving for the United States in the war on terrorism. This legislation would provide the difference between the current salary one receives as a member of the armed forces and the salary they would have made as an employee of the commonwealth. This legislation is critical to providing for the well being of the families of those men and women who are fighting to provide our protection and freedom across the world.

State Sen. Bob Hedlund represents the Plymouth-Norfolk District that includes Weymouth, Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield and Duxbury.

40B meeting Friday in Cohasset

Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, and Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, announce the Legislature's Joint Committee on Housing and Urban Development will conduct public meetings to hear South Shore concerns with Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law, on Friday May 16 at the Marshfield and Cohasset town halls. In Marshfield the informal discussion will begin at 10 a.m., followed by a visit to the Ocean Street site where Beacon Residential Properties has proposed the construction of a 40B development. Another informal meeting on Chapter 40B is scheduled for noon in Cohasset.

Several local officials and residents familiar with the pitfalls of the 40B process have been invited to join the roundtable conversation in the two towns. Discussion will focus on the strain that the law places on municipal budgets, the environment, and the overall health of an affected neighborhood and the community as a whole. Chapter 40B is the 34-year-old statute allowing developers to override local zoning regulations if at least 25 percent of a project's units are deemed affordable by the state. Sixty plus bills have been filed in the Legislature making significant changes to the law.

Bradley said, "I am excited that the Committee is making a site visit to Cohasset so that they can see first-hand the problems relative to Chapter 40B."

Mitt Romney-Tom Finneran feud is a lot more than arithmetic

—The most controversial "study solution" was an investigation on local aid distributions. On this and other studies, the leadership's credibility with many members is in question, the suggestion being that no real change is envisioned. But leaders echoed House Ways and Means Chairman John Rogers, who promised the local aid study will be "real," i.e., result in an actual legislation implementing actual reform.

— The state could save between $68 million and $136 million, depending on participation rates, under yet another early retirement program in the works for state employees. Under a budget amendment, eligible state employees would be enticed to leave office early with pensions they would not be eligible for without the program. The state would be allowed to refill 20 percent of the jobs vacated under the program.

— The House voted to exempt two-way bilingual education programs from the voter-passed English immersion law, and to allow parents of children in kindergarten to choose between regular classrooms and sheltered English immersion classrooms.

• Prosecutors seek broader DNA database — Investigators could solve hundreds more crimes in Massachusetts, if lawmakers expanded the state's DNA database, prosecutors said. Four years after it became operational, prosecutors said expanding the database of genetically coded samples to include all convicted felons is long overdue.

• Senate leaders: budget won't include taxes, borrowing or gaming — As the budget moves to a new arena, Senate leaders announced the proposal they put on the floor for debate after Memorial Day will not call for new taxes, borrowing or expanded gaming and will include spending cuts throughout state government. Travaglini said Senate leaders are cooperating with House leaders and administration officials to deliver a balanced budget by July 1.

Cohasset High senior is in new reality movie

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

For Cohasset High School senior David Ingber, there's no hiding from his parents what he did on spring break this year. In fact, there's no hiding it from anyone.

That's because Ingber's Cancun vacation was all caught on tape. Not to mention, it was made into a major motion picture. Ingber was one of 16 students nationwide chosen for the cast of the movie, "The Real Cancun," which debuted in theaters on April 25. The movie documents eight days and nights of wild spring break celebration in Cancun, Mexico.

Made by the producers of popular MTV hit shows like The Real World and Road Rules, "The Real Cancun" represents the first time that the rapidly-expanding "reality TV" genre has broken through to the big screen. The movie hasn't exactly been a blockbuster, but Ingber says the experience was well worthwhile.

It all started in January when Ingber's mother told him about an ad she saw in the Boston Globe for a casting call. The ad requested "energetic pairs, age 18 to 23." Ingber called his best friend Heidi Vance from Duxbury, and the rest is history.

"We thought this would be a fun thing to do," Ingber said in a interview from his home on Woodland Drive. "We did it on a whim. We didn't think anything would come of it."

The two got called back the next day, and before long they were among the 40 finalists that New Line Cinema selected from a field of more than 10,000 people who auditioned. Ingber and Vance flew to Los Angeles in late February for final interviews, a photo shoot and even a mock "confessional" — a one-on-one with the camera used in the TV show The Real World.

A week later, Ingber and Vance were notified that they were selected to be in the movie. Less than a month after that, they traveled to Cancun for eight days of fun in the sun, spring break style. Production was wrapped on April 25, and the movie was in theaters a month later. The producers cut more than 500 hours of footage down to 97 minutes of laugh-out-loud debauchery.

Ingber admitted he was a little bit nervous about the movie before production. "I definitely did a lot of soul-searching before I signed the final document, because in an atmosphere like Cancun where there's just so much drinking and so much partying, it's easy to get swept away with that," he said. "But at the same time, you have to remember that this is going to be viewed by millions of people, that this is going to be something I did for the rest of my life."

Ingber said his parents were more concerned with the behavior of their son on-screen than they were with the raciness of the movie, which is rated R for nudity, sexual content and partying.

"My parents expected it to be racy, because if you watch MTV for five minutes during their spring break shows, you can get a sense of what it's like down there," he said. "But I think they were more interested in how I behaved and how I comported myself, and I think I upheld my standards. I didn't give in. I didn't lose sight of who I was down there. I think I acted in a way that I have no regrets."

Only 18, Ingber and his companion, Vance, were the youngest members of the cast and the only ones still in high school. Their close friendship is one of the story lines of the movie, but Ingber said he was not surprised.

"(The producers) knew what they were doing. They know how to make the most entertaining project and if they wanted to play up the relationship between Heidi and myself, then that's the best way to go. We trust them," he said.

Once in Cancun, Inbger said producers encouraged cast members to simply be themselves. "Walking in I was a little skeptical, because I've always been one of the people that are dubious about whether reality television is actually real," he said. "I didn't know what to expect. I didn't know if they would be goading us on, if they would be urging us to do certain things that we might not be comfortable with. But, in all honesty, they wanted us to be ourselves. They cast us because they wanted us to be ourselves."

And acting as himself, Ingber is an entertaining character. In one scene, he strums his acoustic guitar and sings a humorous song, entitled "Back in the 80s," which he penned himself. The song was such a hit that, not only did it make the movie, it made the soundtrack as a bonus cut. Also, Ingber was able to copyright the song and one other with the help of New Line Cinema. That means he could see royalties from the song if the CD sells.

"I've always thought that I'd love to go into music but that I didn't have the talent, or I didn't think I'd make it because it's just such a competitive field," Ingber said. "But with an opportunity like this, I don't know where it can lead. It's possible that this could be the push that I need to get me into the music business."

Ingber has always been interested in acting, too. In fact, he met Vance at a meeting of the Massachusetts High School Drama Guild two years ago. He's also been in numerous school and community plays.

Acting as himself wasn't exactly as challenging as his past roles, but Ingber still hopes the movie could lead to more opportunities. "The only way to get your name out there or your foot in the door is to start doing projects," he said.

Moviegoers may be disappointed to see that Ingber abstains from ripping off his shirt in true spring break fashion. That's because he stood on the sidelines for the movie's "hot-body" competition, held for the guys of the cast.

"Last weekend, I went to go see the movie in Kingston with a few of my friends," Ingber said. "I just thought to myself , 'I thank God that I didn't do this hot-body contest,' because I just wouldn't be able to watch myself get up there and make that much of a fool of myself."

That's not to say that Ingber hasn't taken any flack for his role in the film. Some friends, he said, make it a point to remind him how the movie is doing in the box office.

"I've gotten some ribbing…(from) people who have seen the movie, people who haven't seen the movie and just want to generalize…but I expected that," he said.

Ingber said he was frustrated by the numerous negative reviews the movie has received. "What's been driving me crazy…is these stuffy film critics who want to over-analyze it and say that there's no thematic statement in the movie, but that's kind of the point of the movie. It's 97 minutes, and it's fun, it's entertaining, you'll laugh out loud when you watch it, and that's all it is. It's not supposed to be the next 'Citizen Kane.'"

Despite the movie's poor box office performance, Ingber said he valued the experience and planned to keep in touch with the cast members whom he became friends with. Two of them go to college in Boston, and Ingber will attend Harvard in the fall. He plans to write for a school newspaper and eventually pursue a career in journalism.

In the meantime, Ingber's light-hearted attitude has allowed him to keep his brief but star-studded acting career in perspective. "If nothing else comes of this, I can always say I was in a movie," he said.

Racking up the wins

Girls tennis clinches postseason berth, boys two wins away

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The girls tennis team took a major step towards the always-elusive undefeated season, moving to their goal with a resounding 4-1 win over Scituate.

Although the Lady Skippers have gotten the better of their south-border rivals in recent years, the Lady Sailors have been consistently tough with an uncanny ability to re-load their talent pool. This year, the visitors brought a fresh line-up that mixed all-star caliber underclassmen with crafty veteran seniors, a line-up that had the same perfect winning percentage as Cohasset, 9-0, a line-up that led to them to becoming one of the first teams in the area to clinch a playoff berth.

Still, in a tribute to the monster year being had by the Cohasset girls team, the Lady Skippers overpowered their opponents to run their stellar record to 10-0, featuring nine shutouts.

At first singles, sophomore Elizabeth Stone knocked out freshman phenom Lindsey Horne of Scituate. Horne, who had exploded onto the varsity scene with an undefeated run

CHS tracksters show well at State Coaches Meet

By Jim Logan
CORRESPONDENT

At this time of the year, after the regular season's ended and right before the States, it becomes a sort of tune-up time for the spring track squads and such was the case for Cohasset, as the Skippers' boys and girls took part in the State Coaches Meet on Saturday.

The boys crew headed north toward the New Hampshire border for the Coaches Meet in Lowell.

"It was a stiff competition [today], more or less like an All State Meet," said Head Coach Al LaFontaine.

Jared Krupczak was Cohasset's premier entrant for the boys on the day, making it all the way to the semifinals in the 100-meter run before bowing out in the second-to-last frame.

The Lady Skippers fared a bit better than their male counterparts at the girls Coaches Meet held in Plymouth.

"The girls had a pretty nice showing at the meet," Coach LaFontaine said after the competition. "There were some nice efforts out there."

Mary Silvia headlined the Cohasset endeavors, taking home a solid time of 2:29 in the 800, good for a seventh place finish.

Up against it

Cohasset baseball team must win four of final six to grab postseason berth

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

It comes down to this: the Cohasset High baseball team must win four of its final six games to qualify for the postseason for the fist time in many springs.

This is where a split of games in action this week has left the Skippers, at 5-7 and with six games left to reach the magic .500 mark.

On Monday, the local nine dropped a 2-1 extra innings heartbreaker to Carver that could have gotten them to the magic .500 mark for the first time in several weeks.

Ted Straughn was a one-man show for the Skippers in this road loss. The sophomore went all eight innings on the mound, striking out nine while surrendering just three hits. He also pounded out half of his team's four hits, going 2-for-3 at the plate.

"It was really Ted's day," said first year CHS head coach Al Gallotta. "Unfortunately, it wasn't anyone else's."

Carver's Jake Trudeau delivered a walkoff RBI single in the bottom of the eighth to make Straughn the tough luck loser.

Laxmen keep rolling

The CHS boys lacrosse team continued its pursuit of a high seeding for the Div. 3 state tourney this week with two more wins, bringing their season's record to 11-1.

Cohasset 13, Nantucket 7

The Skippers made their Nantucket excursion a success on Saturday, as Mike Rasmussen's five goals and Tom Anderson's two goals and five assists sparked Cohasset to a relatively easy 13-7 win over their non-league opponent.

"Unlike last year, this was a very pleasant day trip to the island," said coach Orcutt. "We showed good intensity throughout, and were up by five before they got their first goal. Nantucket tried to mix us up by playing a zone, but we made an adjustment behind the goal and solved it pretty quickly."

Cohasset jumped to an 8-3 halftime lead, and never looked back. Besides Rasmussen and Anderson, Skipper scorers included Curt Kahn with two goals and two assists, Robert Hickey and soph Jake Previte each with a pair of goals and an assist, and senior John Durkin with an assist.

"Anderson was very effective today as a playmaker," said Orcutt. "We're resting Matt

Sailors swamp lady laxers

Cohasset girls have no answer for resurgent Scituate squad

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

For the first seven minutes or so, Friday night, the Scituate High lady laxers looked every bit like a 1-8 team in allowing Cohasset to jump out to a quick 2-0 lead.

Watching them play from that point on, though, it seemed difficult to envision these Lady Sailors losing one game, never mind the eight straight they had.

Playing under the lights at Cohasset High, the Scituate girls quickly rebounded from early scores by the hosts' Lauren Rizzotti and Nicole Turgiss, ripping off the next six goals to go into the break up, 6-2.

The six unanswered goals only began to tell the story of the Lady Sailors dominance in virtually all areas of the game from that point on.

The only other Cohasset hits came of the bat of senior first baseman Trey Curry and junior shortstop Mike Dooley.

On Tuesday, the Skippers brought new dimensions to the phrase "winning ugly" with a 13-11 win. They were bad, but, fortunately, not quite as bad at visiting South Shore Christian.

The Skippers had just three hits in the game, two delivered by Curry, who also knocked in a run. SSC pounded out 10 hits in the game.

Most of the Skippers runs scored as a result of walks, hit batsmen and errors.

"The fact that we scored 13 runs and had just three hits tells you pretty much all you need to know about this game," reported Gallotta. "We weren't a whole lot better, but a win is a win is a win, and every one of those is big right now."

The Skippers will host the next four games, beginning with South Shore League leading Harwich today (4 p.m. start), and followed by Mashpee on Saturday, Abington Monday and Norwell Wednesday. The boys will then wrap up the regular season at Holbrook on Thursday and at Millis on Friday, both of whom they beat at home earlier this season.

A win over Harwich (13-1) would seem a long shot at best for the Skippers, but coach Gallotta believes his team is quite capable of competing wit the other five teams.

"I think our best chances at a win will probably come in the last two games," appraised the CHS head coach. "Then, realistically, I think we're looking at having to pull out at least two of three against Mahpee, Norwell and Abington. That won't be easy, but we're going to go out and give it all we've got."

Gallotta plans to start staff ace Straughn on the mound on Saturday and Wednesday, saying this is the best way he can think to maximize his team's chances of qualifying for the postseason.

The coach admits candidly, though, that he is concerned about his team's lack of consistency over the last few games.

"We played a pretty good game Monday, but then played one of our worst games of the year the next day, and that's really bothersome at this point in the season," said Gallotta. "You'd like to see your team peaking for the stretch run, but that's just not happening right now. I just don't like this inconsistency I'm seeing."

Success continues for youth lady laxers

Despite a first loss on the season, Cohasset's girls youth lacrosse teams continued their winning and often-times dominating ways weekend.

Girls 12-and-Under

The Cohasset Blue 12-and-Under team traveled to Bourne on Saturday to play one of the league's new teams. As a new squad and without a 14-and-Under team, Bourne is allowed to play some seventh and eighth graders, and the age and physical advantage showed, as Bourne was able to capture a see-saw battle 9-8.

Lindsey Hill led Cohasset with two goals. Isabelle Franklin, Maura Barnes, Amy Meikleham, Madeline Leahy, Lindsay Allard and Katelyn Ryan contributed single scores and Thomson Jaffe contributed 9 saves in the goal.

Franklin scored what appeared to be the game-tying goal with little time left on the clock, only to have the goal disallowed on a controversial call.

The 12-U Blue girls rebounded strong the next day against Hingham Red, jumping out to a 5-1 halftime lead on the strength of goals by Maura Barnes and Katelyn Ryan sandwiched around a natural hat trick from Lindsey Hill. Maddy Altholtz contributed an assist on Hill's second goal.

Hingham opened the second half strong, and narrowed the gap to 5-4 before Barnes broke the momentum. Hill scored seconds later and Barnes closed the scoring with two more, the last on an assist from Hill.

Abby Faulkner, Courtney Culhane, Lauren Blaze and Megan Richardson kept Hingham at bay for the rest of the day, backstopped by goalie Thomson Jaffe, who finished with 9 saves in the 9- 4 win that raised the Cohasset Blue 12-U team's record to 3-1.

Cohasset White 12-U took an unblemished record into Hingham on Mother's Day and — playing with a depleted roster — struggled all day to stay unbeaten.

Hingham White jumped to an early 4-1 lead, which was cut to 4-3 at the half. Gabriella Flibotte scored all three of Cohasset's first-half goals.

After a quick Hingham goal, Lindsay Allard — moved to attack in the second half — responded with her first of the day. Another Hingham score was answered by Flibotte, before Katie Gaumer tied the game and Allard gave Cohasset its first lead at 7-6. Hingham was able to tie the score on a controversial goal off a direct-free position that appeared to have been stopped by Thomson Jaffe short of crossing the goal line.

With the game tied in the waning seconds, a Cohasset penalty gave Hingham one last rush upfield, and Jaffe made a body save as time ran out to preserve the 7-7 tie. She finished the game with 8 saves, and was aided along the way by Amanda Masotta, Chelsea Silvia and Amy Meikleham, who was moved to defense for the day.

Girls 14-and-Under

In all the time Cohasset has played Hingham in lacrosse, there likely never has been a day for the hometown teams like Mother's Day.

Cohasset's two 14-and-Under teams blew out Hingham's Red and White teams by a combined score of 25-1. It appeared to be a case of "can you top this" between the two Cohasset squads.

Cohasset Blue dominated Hingham Red from the outset, jumping to a 6-0 halftime lead on the strength of two goals each from Lindsay Durkin and Kaleigh Swain and single markers from Haley Haracz and Kara Wilcox. McKenna Teague added an assist.

Caren Garber scored twice in the second half, sandwiching Sarah Bookstein's first goal of the season, as Cohasset coasted through the second half. Bookstein, Paige Strecker, Roxanne Tehranian and Colleen Richardson led the team in hustle, with the defense of Rebecca Evans, Katelyn Ryan and Maura Regan never giving the home team an opportunity to breathe. Aisling Guinee smothered five shots to post the extremely rare shutout win.

Cohasset White entered its late afternoon game expecting more from Hingham White. And while it appeared that the second Hingham team was better coached and more skilled, the shorthanded Cohasset squad — which featured just two substitutes, one of them a fifth grader — was firing on all cylinders and never lightened up.

Megan Sacks led the onslaught with four goals, with Mary Previte and Haley Haracz each registering hat tricks. Kaleigh Swain and Gabriella Flibotte both scored twice, with Sara Brown finishing a long give-and-go from Haracz and Tessa Leahy — moved forward from defense — notching her first goal of the season.

Aisling Guinee made four saves in the win.

The 4 x 800 crew of Silvia, along with Jenn Buckley, Lisa Musto and Nicole Whitney also performed decently, bringing back an 11th place mark in the event.

"Overall, for both the girls and boys I'd say we were right where I thought we'd be," LaFontaine commented, talking about the success of the weekend meets. "At this time of year, it's really more of an individual thing for the kids, these meets. And I thought that overall, the kids did a nice job (in that respect)."

The Skippers now have a bit of a breather before taking part in the South Shore League Meet next Tuesday and Wednesday (boys meet to be held in Carver on Monday afternoon; the girls in Norwell on Tuesday).

From there, it's off to the 2003 State Meet.

At this time, nearly 85 percent of the Skippers roster will be attending the annual statewide event in a couple of weeks. Still on the bubble to make the cut but closing in are Leisa Jerome, Lindsey Kennedy, La'Raine Langford and Nicole Whitney.

Another question that remains for the Skippers and the impending State Meet is the status of Ian Kidder. The senior captain, who has been hampered by a hamstring injury of late, has been slowly making a comeback onto the spring track scene.

But will the time he has before the States be enough for the Cohasset javelin and middle distance star?

"I think so," LaFontaine said. "We've been bringing Ian along slowly, trying to save him up for the State Meet. I think by the time it comes around, he'll hopefully be a little stronger and ready to go."

Davis to make sure he's one hundred percent for the tournament, and Tom did a nice job moving from midfield."

Junior Nick Murphy, along with the senior defensive trio of Nick Spirito, Ben Lynner and Evan Pestone, anchored the defense. Murphy finished with 14 saves.

Cohasset 14, Norwell 11

Cohasset started sluggishly on Thursday– perhaps still in a celebration mode after the Hingham win two days earlier– but put together a seven-goal third quarter that provided the margin of a 14-11 away victory over arch-rival Norwell.

The Clippers, fighting for their playoff lives, led 6-4 after two periods, and still led halfway through the third. But Cohasset, led by underclass attackmen Jake Previte and Mike Rasmussen, scored four unanswered goals in the final three minutes of the third period to take control of the game.

"We knew this would be a difficult game, because Norwell was close to a must-win situation," said coach Orcutt. "The condition of their field was also pretty bad and, other than Scituate, this was probably the worst footing we've played on. We managed to stay with them, until we could collect ourselves and go on a run. When that came, in the third, they really didn't have an answer. But, make no mistake, this was a tough game."

Goalie Nick Murphy had a career-high 24 saves to lead the defense, which was missing senior Ben Lynner because of illness. Also absent was senior attackman Matt Davis, nursing a bruised shoulder.

"Murph had an excellent game as a stopper," said Orcutt, "but he made it tougher on himself than it had to be with several poor clearing passes. That's a part of our game we're still working to improve."

Rasmussen led Skipper scorers with four goals and two assists, while Previte tossed in three goals with one assist. Seniors Curt Kahn and John Durkin each had a pair of goals and two assists, and Robert Hickey, Tom Anderson and Joe Durkin had single tallies. Anderson added a pair of assists, while Durkin had one helper.

Mother's Day weekend a treat for all

The Cohasset Boys Lacrosse program celebrated Mother's Day weekend with half the kids heading to Martha's Vineyard for a fantastic lax road trip, while the other players carried on a Cohasset home tradition and presented their mothers with roses during their games against Marshfield. For the most part, victory was in the Spring air as the U15 teams swept both contests home and away, the U13's lost a tough one on the island 9 -3, and the U11's lost one, tied one, and won the other. Here are the highlights:

On the home front, the U15 boys team played a close contest with rival Marshfield on Sunday, managing to pull off a 7-4 victory despite some late game surges by their opponent. As usual, Marshfield came with a very physical squad and were looking to avenge previous losses with their defense keeping it close most of the game. However, though listless at times, the Cohasset group responded with some beautiful pro-style offense that made the difference in the outcome. Jared Kinch had 2 goals and 2 assists with the last goal coming off of a weak side lefty "zinger" that found the upper left corner with rocket velocity from about 15 yards out. Mark Flibotte continued his consistent play by being in the right spot at the right time, and also netting 2 goals and assisting on 2 more. Alex Shipp added a solo tally on a great finish from his crease position off of a blistering feed from Kinch and Pete Oswald notched another off of a behind the cage pass from teammate Mike Bunstein - who proved that scoring isn't the only way to contribute as he had 3 critical assists while playing injured. Solid defensive play by Conor Holway, Kyle Pinkus, Mike Kusek, Chris Kuppens, and Sam DeGiacomo (who doubled as middie as well) shored up the strong showing by goaltender Wes Ulmer who had 8 saves. The highlight of the day came in the waning moments with less than a minute to play when Adam Smith gained possession at midfield and started a fast break. He then dished it off to Matt Burgess on the left wing, who then found Flibotte on the high post.

Flibotte faked towards the goal only to find his neighbor, Mike Grimm alone on the crease for an "easy" 4 point-pass goal. Poetry in motion . . .

The U11 home squad had a terrific game Sunday against Marshfield which saw 7 lead changes or ties in a great back and forth contest that wasn't decided until the end when Cohasset brought home a 10-8 victory on 2 late goals by John Collins. Pat Kearney started the scoring on a nice 2 dodge move to tie the score at 1. Sam Richardson and Terrance Durkin both had goals and Thomas Flibotte ended the first half with a goal to give Cohasset's their first lead 4-3. Marshfield started strong in the 3rd period scoring 3 straight goals before Charlie Coffman made a great shot from a tough angle for the score. Durkin scored again and then assisted on another goal by Richardson to make it 7-6 Cohasset after 3 periods. Mitch McNary made a strong half field run and notched a solo tally to make it 8-6. After 2 more goals by Marshfield, Collins then put it on his shoulders and carried the hometown team to a Mother's Day Victory with his 2 goals in less than 5 minutes to play.

Max MacCleave played very well the first half in goal with 6 saves and Kyle Healy was in the cage in the 2nd half and had 8 saves some very tough shots.

Defensively, Nate Brown and Jake Durkin played well as did Derek Froio and Dan Barnes from the middie position. Patrick Lewis and Patrick Cantillon also both played well throughout the game.

The U15 road trippers found a gorgeous Spring day accompanying them to the Vineyard as over half of the boys and their parents took the trip to the "island" on Saturday. The U15 group had a tough contest on their hands and battled back and forth with their hosts to finally wrestle away a 9 - 8 victory with superb offensive displays by PJ McCaw and defensive prowess led by Jeff Brown.

The U13's had games against Quincy on Thursday and Hingham and Martha's Vineyard on Saturday - here's how the action played out: Cohasset v. Quincy Cohasset hosted Quincy last Thursday night and had their hands full from the outset. The Quincy squad was quite mature and had a distinct physical advantage over the feisty Cohasset squad. Quincy jumped out to an early lead and never looked back, ending the 1st quarter up 6-1. Cohasset's score coming from midfielder Owen Landon. The second quarter saw Cohasset score on a classic give-and-go attack play as John Kearney fed Andrew Bell for the score. Unfortunately for the home town team Quincy continued to score and led 9-2 at the half. The second half displayed a courageous Cohasset squad as they battled a physically dominant Quincy team. Owen Landon notched his second of the night and the game ended with Quincy on top 10-3.

Cohasset v. Hingham

A joint white/blue squad traveled to Hingham on Saturday to play a perennial rival. The Cohasset squad were ready to go from the outset in this one as they jumped out to a 3-1 lead at the end of the 1st quarter.

Cohasset's scores all came from fine attack play, with John Kearney finding the back of the net and Ian Porter scoring twice. Porter's tallies came on fine feeds from Will Wise. The second quarter was played quite evenly, with Cohasset seeing some fine goaltending from Chris Brown. Cohasset got a second wind at halftime as they came out quite strong with three third quarter scores. Midfielder Andrew McKenna netted one on a feed from John Kearney. McKenna returned the favor on Will Wise's tally, and midfielder Logan Chase scored after a series of classic dodges on his way to the net.

Hingham added three scores of their own and the quarter ended with Cohasset up 6-4. Cohasset put the game out of reach in the fourth quarter with four scores. Eamon Davis scored on a pretty rush. Will Wise added his second of the game on a sweet feed from hustling midfielder David Toomey.

Olly Forrer added one, and attack man Jackson Dean finished the scoring on a feed from John Kearney. The game ended with Cohasset on top 10-5.

Cohasset v. Martha's Vineyard

An all-volunteer team enjoyed a trip to Martha's Vineyard on a beautiful Saturday, marred only by an 9-3 loss to a skilled Vineyard team. Cohasset's defense of Taylor McQuade, Keegan Flynn and Jake Wheelwright saw plenty of action in the first quarter, as the skill and discipline of the somewhat older Vineyard team kept most of the play in Cohasset's end.

Goalie Jack Murphy also got plenty of work, making several nice saves, and by the end of the first quarter Cohasset was down 3-0. The second quarter saw more balanced play, as Cohasset's midfielders began to be able to take advantage of Vineyard mistakes and bring the play down to the Vineyard end. Middies, Phil Galligan, Austin Meyers Enrico Teruzzi, Mark Seraikis, Dean Driscoll, Luke Brewer, Owen Landon, Chris Walsh and Will Evans all were tenacious, but met tough Vineyard defense in the offensive end of the field. With two Vineyard goals and a pretty goal on a behind-the-back shot by Jonny Wade late in the second quarter, it was 5-1 Vineyard at the half. The second half showed Cohasset's mettle, as they continued to battle valiantly against the clearly stronger Vineyarders. With Nick Lieberman, Charles Mushkin, Gordy Smith, Jonny Wade and Chris Brady sharing duty at attack, Cohasset was able to generate some offense, and played Vineyard close to even in the second half. With goals by Wade (assisted by Chris Walsh) and Dean Driscoll, and a near-miss off the post by Nick Lieberman, versus four Vineyard tallies, the game finished at 9-3.

The U11 group played two games and had a tougher time of it losing the first one 10 - 3 before shaking off the "jet lag" from the ferry to battle back to a 3 - 3 tie in the second. Both games featured strong performances by middies Derek Youngman, Luke Ernst, Chris Murphy, Brendan Horigan, Jeff Durkin, Andrew Whitney, and Patrick Dunn, while the defense was anchored by Eric Wasel, Nick Routhier, Chase Baldwin, and Ben Curley who helped to protect fine performances by goaltenders Murphy, Horigan, and Brennan Burkowski who all took "a few for the team" during the excitement.

Here are some past games that we missed telling you about . . .

Boys U12 White v Duxbury

The 12U White squad rolled into Duxbury for its second game of the season. A beautiful sunny day was a welcome sight after a long week of rain.

Cohasset was ready to play as it dominated the early play with good ball control. First period scores from midfielders, Eamon Davis and Owen Landon, had Cohasset up 2-1 at the end of the first.

Duxbury found its game in the second quarter as both sides trades scores.

Cohasset's attack of John Kearney, Gordon Smith and Andrew Bell shined with some fine playmaking, with Kearney and Smith netting scores on feeds from Bell. Kearney's tally reflected his nose for the goal, similar to what he displayed the previous week in Marshfield. Davis and Landon notched their second goals of the day rounding out Cohasset's second quarter scoring.

Duxbury went into halftime with a 7-6 lead. Duxbury came out for the second half firing on all cylinders. The home team's midfield play began to wear Cohasset down. Cohasset was play a lot of defense and when the quarter had come to an end, Duxbury had opened up a 10-6 lead.

Cohasset fought back in the fourth quarter on Smith's second score of the day on a sweet feed from Bell and midfielder Ian Quinlan's tally on an assist from Landon. Duxbury had too much on this day, answering Cohasset's scoring with three of their own and ended on top 13-8.

Cohasset's U13 Blue Squad took on a sharp looking Norwell team Monday night in front of a good crowd of lacrosse fans. Although we got off to a slow start, finishing the first quarter down 1-0, Cohasset went on to prevail by a score of 11-3. Some of our White Squad players came out to help, making our defense nearly impenetrable. The team showed prowess working the field and finding the open man and our poke checks are really starting to

Howard shines in rematch with Schultz

Cohasset men's tennis falls in playoff to Weymouth, 2-1

Hundreds of tennis fans were treated to a spectacular display of tennis at its highest level last Saturday at the Weymouth Club as the Weymouth Mens Team nipped Cohasset 2-1 in the opening round of the Men's South of Boston Championships.

Alex Howard, the number three ranked Mens Open player in New England, knew that he would require his best game and strongest lineup to defeat the veteran Cohasset TC team captained by Brian Hill, Sr. Howard brought out top tennis guns Steve Flanigan, (ranked number 1 in Mens Open in 2002) teamed with doubles expert Gary Durante at the first doubles spot, and Tim Riley (ranked 5 in Men's 35 Open Division) and Vince Heidenreich at second doubles to avenge a personal and team loss to the Cohasset squad when they met last month.

Cohasset countered with Bud Schultz at singles, Paul Shaw and John Englander at first doubles, and Brazilian champion Jader Moreira and Brian Hill Sr. at second doubles. Team mates Fred Buffum and Peter Duffy concurred with the strategy.

Hill put his money on Bud Schultz, formerly ranked 39 in the world on the ATP circuit, to win again over the speeding bullet Howard and to sneak out second doubles to win the match.

The first match to finish was Hill and Moreira dispatching Riley and Heidenreich 6-4, 6-2 giving the Cohasset Men a quick 1-0 lead. Hill and Moreira had never played as a team, but quickly fell in synch with Hill volleying strongly and Moreira covering the court like an ocelot. Both players held service for the entire match and broke the Weymouth team once in the first set and twice in the second.

John Englander and Paul Shaw, 9-1 in regular season play at first doubles, had their hands full with Flanigan's power and Durante's finesse. Shaw and Englander played superbly before falling 6-3, 7-5 to even the match at 1-1.

Said Englander: "Paul Shaw and I may be two aged veterans (we used to be "aging," but now we're "aged"), but we still managed to put a scare into the young turks. The second set was close, and we were actually up a service break at 3-1. They were just too tough."

All eyes fell on the feature match of Shultz versus Howard, which would decide the outcome. Shultz broke Howard early in the match but couldn't close out the set as Howard strung a series of laser beam passing shots and fabulous retrieves to eke out the first set 7-6.

Energized by the comeback, Howard broke Schultz again at 2-1 in the second. Schultz fought tenaciously, taking the net at every opportunity, to climb back in the match. The pivotal point in the match came as Shultz attacked the net off Howards serve on break point. Howard fired a rifle shot gound stroke that Shultz volleyed for what looked like a clean winner down the line. Somehow Howard got to the ball and carved an obscene slice angle crosscourt. Schultz used his giant wingspan and snapped a backhand overhead down the opposite line that appeared again to be a winner. Howard raced across the court and flipped a topspin forehand lob over the closing Schulz' head for a winner. All Bud could do was graciously applaud. Howard held serve to win the match and secured the victory for Wemouth 2-1.

Weymouth will now meet Scituate for 2003 bragging rights this Saturday at 12:30 at the Weymouth Club.

before being downed by the also unbeaten Stone, became the first player this year to give Stone a competitive match. Stone, with machine-like precision and power, has been able to dispose of all other opponents with extreme ease, but the 6-2, 6-1 final score in this contest does not tell the gritty fight put up by both players in the two and a half hour match.

In high school tennis, where graduations and line-up shifts move players constantly over the course of a career, rivals between two players rarely last more than three or four matches. However, Stone and Horne may very well spend the next three years going head-to-head for some hard-fought and intriguing matches both in the regular season and beyond.

At second singles, captain Lindsay Grossman continued her dominance at the position over the very tough Jen Sheehan. Meanwhile, the doubles teams from Cohasset excelled past their rivals with a twin wins. Senior captain Julie Shea won with junior Courtney Caron, 6-4, 6-2, and junior Corey Evans won with sophomore Rachel Garber at second doubles.

Having qualified for the tournament for, now, the 12th consecutive year under coach Sarah Meehan, the team is questing for the number one seed in the South Sectional bracket. Cohasset will need to swing two wins against Norwell, the team that has shared the title of League Champion in a few of the seven straight years that Cohasset has held or co-owned the crown.

Boys

On the boys side, Cohasset recorded two more wins to inch closer to what is fast becoming a playoff-built program. With wins over Carver and Cape Cod Academy, the Skippers improved to 6-3 on the year (3-2 SSL), just two wins shy of their third straight postseason qualification.

The team does have seven more matches in which to record the two needed wins, but they will be harder than average to come by, with the team meeting tennis titans Hingham, Norwell (twice) and Harwich in the coming weeks. Still, second year coach Kent Parrot remains confident his squad can win again over the rebuilding Mashpee, then take down Abington in their second meeting of the year.

In the wins, Cohasset followed its increasingly regular pattern of sweeping all three singles matches to take the wins. Cohasset has done this in all six of their victories to date.

Junior Tim Anton won twice at second singles, proving that his recent success at doubles was not an indicator of lack of versatility. Anton stayed undefeated lifetime against Carver all-star Rob Gesvaldo, winning 6-4, 6-3, and beat Cape Cod's number two 6-2, 7-5.

Freshman Nils Sceery seems to have found his niche at third singles, winning handily against both opponents on Monday and Tuesday. Sceery took down a fellow freshman in Carver, 6-3, 6-2, and won against Cape Cod similarly in two sets.

Senior Scott Faber and Ross Lieb-Lappen, playing together at first doubles for the first time since 2002, played what Parrot called "the best doubles match I had seen in two years here" in a losing cause to Carver. Against Carver's top doubles pair, a tandem that had narrowly been eliminated in the round of eight at State Individuals, Faber and Lieb-Lappen held more than their own, finally dropping 4-6, 6-4, 5-7.

Ingber won both his matches 6-1, 6-1 at first singles to improve to 6-2 on the year.

Sailors swamp lady laxers

"We flipped the switch on," said coach Paula Evans with a smile, referring to a remark she made for the previous week's Mariner regarding the inability of her team to "switch it on."

"So much of this game is mental," the veteran coach continued. "We did a much better job on draws and ground balls. The girls also settled the ball better, taking their time and being patient for the open cutter. Julie Heffernan (two assists) had some great feeds from behind. The goals were spread out across the board which shows that the trust issues are depleting."

Kim Berlo got Scituate on the board with 17:26 to play in the first half, just seconds after Cohasset had extended its lead to 2-0, as she scooped up the ensuing draw, quickly split a pair of surprised Cohasset defenders as she wheeled in from the left of the goal and beat Cohasset goalie Gia Petrakis low to her farside.

The game was tied 96 seconds later. Alyse Kennedy again won the draw for the Lady Sailors, and the Scituate attack moved the ball patiently around the perimeter. Lauren Glancy rifled a shot from in close off the crossbar, retrieved her own rebound and re-set the offense, which eventually led to a nice feed from behind the net to Kennedy in the slot for a quick re-direct past Petrakis to make it a 2-2 game with 15:50 to go until halftime.

Berlo threw in her second tally of the game on a nifty crossover move at 15:33, the righty finishing with a high shot from her left-hand side after she cut into the middle and eluded a pair of defenders.

Berlo completed the hat trick 12:03 before the break on a hard charge and a pretty feed from behind net by Glancy.

Glancy made it 5-2 just 90 seconds later off of a re-start 30-feet straight out in front of Petrakis.

Kennedy closed out the first half scoring at 6:59, collecting her own rebound and beating Petrakis with a well placed shot top left corner.

The Lady Sailors picked right up where they left off in terms of winning ground balls and draws to open the second half, and two goals by Suzanne Belmont inside the first four minutes essentially put the game out of reach.

Cohasset finally ended the Scituate run when senior captain Maura McKenney made it 8-3 with 18:51 to play. Turgiss added her second of the game a few minutes later to cut the Lady Skippers deficit to four goals.

However, Morgan Kenny scored a backbreaker for Scituate with just over 10 minutes top play, finishing on a pretty cross field pass from Lila McCormack.

Cohasset's Ashley Faber made the final score look a bit more presentable, putting away a feed from Lisa Spirito with 1:47 to go.

Scituate freshman goalie Darby St. Claire-Barrie stopped nine of 14 shots, including a couple of quality saves in the early going before her teammates began cranking up the offense.

"They outplayed us, but we didn't exactly help ourselves either," noted none too pleased Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney. "We were beaten to ground balls and we couldn't connect on those third and fourth passes like Scituate was."

Lady lax notes

The Lady Skippers rebounded with a 10-0 win over Nantucket on Saturday, following the long bus and ferry trip, to get back to .500 on the season at 5-5.

McKenney notched her 100th career goal on her way to a hat trick, and Turgiss buried four shots. Petrakis made eight saves to record the shutout.

The Cohasset girls were hoping to get back over the magic .500 mark for the first time in a while on Tuesday, as they traveled to Falmouth. They're slated to hit the road again today to take on Marshfield and then host Hingham next Tuesday.

Nine players contributed to our 11 points - evidence that we play as a team. Logan Chase, Danny Brady and Olly Forrer had two goals each; Andrew Smith had a goal and assist; Ian Lyster, Derek St. Peter, Dean Driscoll and Sean McCarthy each had a goal. Sean McCarthy and Conor Queenan each had an assist as well. Great job everybody.

Cohasset's U13 Blue Squad was uncharacteristically defeated over the weekend. Plymouth showed skill and determination as they stretched their advantage from 4-3 at half time to a final score of 11-4. Two Cohasset players stepped up for the team to fill our goalie position and each registered about five saves. Thanks to Pat Hurley and Logan Chase. Charles Mushin and Will Wise posted one assist each. Dean Driscoll netted two goals, Andrew Smith added another, as did Will Wise.

Cohasset's U13 Blue Squad defeated Quincy 13-7 Thursday night at home. While the Quincy squad was slightly undermanned, Cohasset controlled the ball and the tempo throughout the game. Nine players in all registered goals for Cohasset.

Olmsted portrayed in one-man play

"Frederick Law Olmsted: Passages in the Life of an Unpractical Man" will be presented at Derby Academy (in Larson Hall) Saturday, May 17 at 4 p.m. The one-man play has been written, produced, and presented by Gerry Wright, who plays the title role.

The piece is based on the life and writings of Frederick Law Olmsted, father of Landscape architecture in the United States and creator of the Emerald Necklace park system (which includes among its treasures Hingham's very own World's End).

The play allows for audience members to gain insight into the life of a man who possessed incredible vision and energy, one who immersed himself in the critical events of American history in the 19th century. They witness the writer who understood the dynamics of slavery, the appointee of the Lincoln Administration during the Civil War, the landscape architect and catalyst for hundreds of parks across America.

The Olmsted play has been presented once a month during 2003, with performances scheduled for the next five months, including a performance in Russia, where the play will be presented for a seminar entitled, "What makes America, America?"

Gerry Wright has worked and studied in the fields of conservation and human services for the past 50 years. His dramatic portrayal is informed by his own passion regarding issues of social justice and conservation, issues for which Olmsted was a most persevering and principled pioneer. Throughout the performance, Wright is poised, energetic, and remarkably comfortable with his character.

Gerry Wright plays Frederick Law Olmsted at Derby Academy Saturday.

The presentation at Derby Academy will be in honor of the work of Christine Cooper and Charles Hauck at Jamaica Pond during the 20th anniversary of The Jamaica Pond Project. Proceeds from the performance will benefit landscaping projects at Derby Academy and The Jamaica Pond Project's programs for city kids, including environmental education programs.

As well as providing beautiful music, the concert will be instructional as well, for Obleschuk will prove commentary on the various compositions and styles. He will also be discussing their religious context as well.

A country classic

Collin Raye brings music, passion to Plymouth

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Collin Raye sings — and for the most part writes — songs from the heart, as the singer himself describes in his publicity and bio sheets. And while so many other performers make that claim often to the point of reducing it to an empty cliche, particularly within the Nashville production-line machine of Raye's chosen genre, a close listen to the lyrical substance and committed vocal delivery of the singer's numerous country chart hits counters that effect with a distinct feeling of sincerity.

Collin Raye

Raye brings his songs from the heart to the local area this Friday when he appears in concert at Plymouth Memorial Hall at 7:30 p.m. The show should make a worthy follow-up to last month's ice-breaking country music rave at Plymouth Hall spotlighting singers Mark Wills and Blake Shelton, proving that, contrary to some speculation perhaps, live national-act country can be a strong sell in Plymouth.

Boasting 23 Top Ten country hits — including 15 number one hits — over a decade-long career, with song topics ranging from hot, good-time romance to alcoholism and domestic violence, Raye and band are sure to rock the house with plenty of dramatic flair. One might also expect from the Arkansas native a few well-chosen comments regarding ongoing world events with a decided patriotic stand. On his website at collinraye.com, the singer offers a detailed, well-informed and realistic take on the current international military action under the link Collin Raye's Foreign Policy 101, taking a few well-aimed jabs at such politically opposing show-biz voices as Natalie Maines of the Dixie Chicks, Barbara Streisand, Rosie O'Donnell and Sean Penn.

"WAR BAD...PEACE GOOD! WOW, that was brilliant! I never realized! Thank you Hollywood, Sheryl Crow, Barbra Streisand, Natalie Maines, Rosie O'Donnell, just to name a few," scoffs Raye on the webpage. "It has taken several thousand years of human history to develop insight of that level. COME ON! EVERYBODY KNOWS THAT WAR SUCKS! Especially our President and his staff. Fortunately, Mr. Bush, unlike former President Carter, who said recently that 'war is futile and doesn't ever accomplish anything...', knows better."

Raye's songs never get quite so political, but they do offer just as much passion. This is evident on the singer's own compositions such as the heart-rending ballad of marital separation "Little Rock" (a number 1 country hit), and the rock-country rave-up "My Kind of Girl" (also number 1 country), who buys "Cosmo and Hot Rod Magazines" and quotes "William Faulkner and Martin Luther King." Raye's hits also include well-picked covers like Lee Roy Parnell's R&B/country romp "That's My Story (and I'm Stickin' To It)" and even Journey's 1980s MTV hit "Open Arms," which probably works better as a country ballad anyway.

Along with the Top 10 hits, Raye's credits include five certified platinum albums, more than a dozen number 1 Country Music Television videos and numerous TV appearances from the Today and Tonight shows to Austin City Limits and Nashville Networks specials. He also has the honor of a "Collin Raye Boulevard" named for him on Highway 71 in his birthplace of DeQueen, Arkansas.

Raye's Plymouth show comes in the midst of a busy performing week, in between dates in New York State on Thursday and Pennsylvania on Saturday.

Father/daughter artists showcase work at library

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

It's not often that two family generations of artists come together in the same gallery hall. But such an occurrence always provides for some interesting contrasts and counterpoints.

A South Shore father-daughter team of artists, with some 85 years combined experience, has joined to present "Generations," an exhibit on display in the gallery hall at Pembroke Public Library through May 31. John Cornacchio, of Duxbury, and his daughter, Janet Cornacchio, of Scituate, offer a colorful collection of oil, pastel and watercolor works that showcase common creative family traits as well as distinct individual styles.

Of the combined artistic experience, clearly the major slice belongs to the family patriarch. John, 79, began painting at age eight and has by his own admission gratifyingly parlayed his early childhood interest into a long and profitable career. Born and raised in Brooklyn, John moved to Duxbury in 1961 and his credits include numerous exhibits and affiliations with galleries in Duxbury, Scituate, Westwood, Wayland and other towns. He's currently director of the Scituate Art Gallery.

"Being an artist was not by choice. It was extraordinarily compelling, and I had no choice."
John Cornacchio

More Matrix up their sleeve

By Ed Symkus
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

The Matrix Reloaded (A-)

It's been four years since "The Matrix" was unleashed upon an unsuspecting public; four years since critics were divided — arguing that the film was either brilliant or a ridiculous hodgepodge of borrowed philosophical ideas and groundbreaking visual effects that wore out their welcome; four years since moviegoers latched on to and made a mega-hit out of the story of an alternate reality and the human race's desperate fight for survival against a race of machines.

Sure, not a lot of sense could be made of the intricate plotting, or the worlds between which Neo (Keanu Reeves), Trinity (Carrie-Anne Moss) and Morpheus (Laurence Fishburne) regularly traversed, either virtually or physically. But that first installment in what will, before this year's end, be a trilogy, was much more about its stunning look than anything in the plot.

So here we have the same characters, still fighting the good fight of human versus machine. At the beginning of the sequel — and don't even think about trying to follow anything in this one without having seen the first — the evil machines are closing in on the world known as Zion with one intention: elimination of anything that isn't a machine. Neo must vanquish the evil, save the world and carry on a loving relationship with Trinity.

Trinity (Carrie-Anne Moss) gets a blast out of the "Matrix" sequel.

Oh yes, this time there's plenty of character development — the sequel doesn't shy away from a little romance. Neo and Trinity are a hot item. They're featured in a heavy-duty erotic sequence. But there's also a look at newest crew member Link (Harold Perrineau) and his girlfriend Zee (Nona Gaye) and how war affects their once happy homestead. There's also romantic friction between Captain Niobe (Jada Pinkett Smith), her superior officer Commander Lock (Harry Lennix) and Morpheus.

But "Matrix Reloaded" is no love story. Special effects still rule. The first flying sequence happens about 10 seconds into the film, followed by the first fight about 10 seconds later. Blazing guns soon follow.

It seems that a "Men in Black"-like agent named Smith (Hugo Weaving, in both sinister and comic mode) is waiting around every corner and that he and his look-alike minions are waiting for a good fight, whether it be with Neo or Trinity or Morpheus. Those fights are plentiful and are ramped up in style and substance from the first film. The initial lengthy one between Neo and an army of Smiths is simply, utterly astounding. The fight sequences becomes a series of graceful ballets, complete with kicks and chops and blades.

But the early fights are nothing compared with what happens when the word "freeway" is mentioned. That's a signal for the film to shift into high-gear, and an extended sequence that's a marvel of stunt driving, visual effects and editing, all accompanied by a terrific, pounding score.

The Wachowski Brothers, who again wrote and directed, slow things down from time to time in order to introduce characters — The Architect, The Oracle and The Keymaker — who try to explain the plot. But the plot is irrelevant; "Matrix Reloaded" is all about the spectacle. The ride is so wild and so much fun, it just doesn't matter if everything makes sense.

Rediscovering Caesar Salad

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Originally created by Caesar Cardini in Tijuana, Mexico in 1924, the Caesar salad was instantly a tableside sensation that has continued to grow in popularity. At its best it is a wonderful blend of lemon, garlic and anchovy emulsified with egg and oil. At its worst, it is a dull, soggy blend of overbearing dressing and wilted lettuce.

First, the egg. Since I didn't want to use a raw egg for safety reasons, I found that a partially cooked egg (place egg in cold water, bring to a boil, remove from heat, and let sit for 3 1/2 minutes) produces a white that is set and a yolk that is thick and runny and about 142 degrees. I found one yolk was sufficient to add richness and flavor to the dressing.

As for the oil, I found the extra virgin oil used in the above recipes to be overwhelming. I preferred half extra virgin olive oil and half canola or corn oil. This combination contributes flavor and body. I went with three tablespoons of each. The resulting dressing is thick but not stiff or rubbery and the olive oil still adds lots of flavor but is not harsh or overpowering. Next, I added three anchovy fillets — four were a bit too fishy. I didn't care for any more than one medium garlic clove. A little bit of raw garlic goes a long way and the single clove packs plenty of flavor. To balance out the dressing, I ended up using 1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice, 1 1/2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce, 1 teaspoon Dijon mustard, and a bit of salt and pepper. I tried adding a bit of vinegar and it didn't make the cut.

As for method, I chose to make the dressing in a food processor. The recipes I found all used a hand-held whisk, which does give the dressing a bit more texture. The dressing works prepared either way, but the food processor is simple and painless. As for the croutons, I wanted them crisp and garlicky. The secret was a 350-degree oven, a country loaf or baguette cut into 3/4-inch cubes, 3 tablespoons olive oil and 1-tablespoon butter, to which I added 2 smashed garlic cloves and some salt. I tossed the bread cubes in the mixture and toasted them until golden brown, about 18 minutes.

Caesar salad is traditionally made with romaine hearts and I found their sweet flavor and crunchy texture excellent. These days it's easy to purchase hearts, and for our recipe about two medium-sized hearts are plenty. The lettuce should be torn into 1 1/2 or 2-inch pieces to produce 10 to 12 cups.

Grilled or roasted chicken breast can be added to make this dish a light lunch or supper. My concluding recipe is as follows:

REALLY GOOD CAESAR SALAD

Grilled or roasted chicken breast can be added to make this dish a light lunch or supper. (The soft-boiled method used to cook the egg in this recipe is meant to thicken the yolk and not to guarantee pasteurization. If the safety of the yolk is imperative, you should let the egg sit for 5 minutes (instead of 3 1/2) before adding the yolk to the food processor. The yolk will be set and resulting dressing will not be as creamy.) Both the dressing and the croutons can be made up to a day ahead of time. If sitting in the refrigerator makes the dressing too thick, you should sprinkle droplets of water on the salad with your fingertips while tossing until the lettuce is evenly coated with the dressing.

For the croutons

3 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil

1 tablespoon unsalted butter

2 large garlic cloves, smashed

1/4 teaspoon salt

4 cups 3/4 inch bread cubes from a country loaf or baguette

For the dressing

1 large egg

1 medium garlic clove, pressed or finely chopped

3 anchovy fillets, coarsely chopped

1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice

1 1/2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce

1 teaspoon Dijon mustard

3 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil

3 tablespoons canola, corn or vegetable oil

Salt

Freshly ground black pepper

To finish the salad

10 to 12 cups romaine lettuce hearts (pale green and yellow leaves) rinsed, dried and torn into 1 1/2-inch pieces

1/3 cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese

1. For the croutons: Heat the oven to 350 degrees and adjust a rack to the center position. Place the oil, butter, garlic and salt in a large skillet over medium heat. Once the butter has stopped foaming, swirl to mix the butter and oil and let sit for 15 minutes. Pick out and discard the garlic pieces. Place the bread cubes on a baking sheet and drizzle with the olive oil/butter mixture. Toss with your fingers to evenly coat the bread cubes and spread to an even layer. Place in the oven and bake until dark golden brown, stirring occasionally, about 15 to 20 minutes.

2. For the dressing: Place the egg in a small pan with enough cold water to cover by one inch. Bring the water to a boil over medium-high heat. Remove from heat and cover and let sit for 3 1/2 minutes. Rinse in cold water until the egg is cool enough to handle, crack the shell and break open the egg—the white will be set but the yolk should still be runny. Add the yolk to the bowl of a food processor along with the garlic, anchovy, lemon juice, Worcestershire sauce, and Dijon mustard. Mix the olive and canola oil together in a measuring cup with a pouring spout. With the processor running, drizzle the oil into the processor bowl in a very thin steady stream. The dressing will be thick and creamy. Taste for seasoning, adding salt and freshly ground pepper as desired.

3. To finish the salad: Place the lettuce, three quarters of the dressing and cheese in a large bowl. Toss well to evenly coat the lettuce with the dressing, adding the remaining dressing as needed. Serve immediately with the croutons.

Brooklyn. "Today many years later, I am still compelled to go to my easel and paint or draw. The opportunity to express, in my own way, the love and appreciation of nature is especially gratifying."

John is also a graduate of the Pratt Institute of Art and has studied in workshops with, among others, the well-noted South Shore-based courtroom sketch artist Constance Pratt. His daughter, Janet, grew up in Duxbury before moving to Scituate. For her, art is more an adopted pursuit, begun seriously after having studied art history while earning a degree in theology at Harvard University. Janet, now in her 50s, moved to watercolor painting after starting with crafts such as fabric painting and tromp l'oeil design.

Nature is not the full scope of John subject-matter range, but it covers some of the most impressive of his work included in "Generations." Two coastal scenes, the gulls and white water of "Breaking Waves," and the flat-calm bay view of "Bar Harbor" offer a dramatic contrast. Other land/seascapes add quaint images, such as the gondola traversing the river passways in "Venice," the doors of a stately facade in "Dublin Doors," and back to Venice where the artist finds a sleeping calico cat on a doorstep in "Homeless in Venice."

John also includes well-rendered portraits in oil and pastel, including one of his wife, "Marie," numerous floral still lifes and several oil and pastel linear images focused on dancing and motion. Janet, meanwhile, focuses on oil and watercolor florals with occasional coastal landscapes. She obviously gives away much in experience to her father, but emerges with her own style and vision.

"Today many years later, I am still compelled to go to my easel and paint or draw. The opportunity to express, in my own way, the love and appreciation of nature is especially gratifying."
John Cornacchio

"My journey from parental influence through college art history study and work with many local artists now resonates in my own work," said the younger Cornacchio in her artist's statement. "I am now able to take advantage of my dad's advice and skill. Good form and design are important, but of paramount interest is color: intense, subtle, flowing and controlled. Color tells the story."

Flowering Trees for the Spring Landscape

Green thumbs up

Second of two parts

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

A brilliant flash of fiery orange and black catches my eye as I weed and cultivate my gardens on a cool damp morning in May. The unmistakable plumage of the male Baltimore Oriole is readily discerned among the slender pale green cascading branches of my weeping willow as he hops about the treetops singing his distinctive tune of whistles and chatters. The oriole's spring arrival in my garden usually coincides with the blooming of the equally vibrant blooms of my Japanese quince, which it frequently visits to sip the nectar of the vivid orange-red blossoms.

Tiny flakes of pale pink confetti float to the earth as a crisp morning breeze scatters the delicate blossoms of my weeping cherry. Beneath the pewter gray branches of the magnolias lies a satin blanket of pink and white petals. As these fleeting flowers depart, the showy double pink blossoms of Kwanzan cherries emerge to take their place accompanied by sensational clouds of pink, white and red crabapple trees and dazzling dogwoods. The month of May is a glorious time of year for our flowering trees and shrubs.

Spectacular, reliable bloom makes the family of crabapple trees one of the loveliest of our spring-blooming woody plants. Innumerable varieties are currently available offering a wide range of flower color including white, pink and red, as well as a diversity of fall fruits in varying size and color. There are weeping cultivars and considerable variation in branching forms and ultimate sizes, with several new dwarf varieties ideal for smaller spaces. A few introductions provide season-long bronze or burgundy foliage. Cultivars that produce small fruits are more appealing to birds that will spend the fall and winter partaking of the attractive, shiny clusters of berries which may be red, purple, yellow or orange. Perhaps the crabapple's greatest fault is its tendency to be an extremely vigorous grower which requires yearly pruning shortly after bloom to thin crossed branches and remove suckers from around the base of the tree. Select new, disease-resistant varieties and plant in a sunny location in well-drained soils for a stunning spring display year after year.

Few ornamental trees rival the grace and year-round beauty of the American flowering dogwood (Cornus florida). Its unique flowers, elegant fall foliage, colorful fruit and attractive winter silhouette make it an invaluable asset to any landscape. Native to the eastern half of the U.S., it is clothed in spectacular flower clusters of white, pink or red just as the foliage begins to break. The showiest parts of these flowers are actually four, brightly colored, notched bracts, not petals, with the true, tiny yellow flowers to be found in the center of the cluster. In autumn, small, shiny, brilliant red fruits are borne but are often quickly devoured by wildlife. When the handsome, deep scarlet to bronze foliage drops, the horizontal branching presents a lovely distinctive form throughout the dormant months.

The American dogwood's natural habitat as an understory plant in forests, shaded by larger, hardwood trees, makes it ideally suited to the partially shaded landscape. Well-drained, organic soils are preferred as heavy, poorly drained soils usually lead to their demise. Dogwoods are shallow-rooted trees and the application of mulch over the root system is recommended, especially if the specimen is to be grown in full sun, to help maintain cooler soil temperatures and assist with water retention. Supplemental water should be provided during periods of drought, preferably by means of a soaker hose as wetting the foliage may lead to leaf diseases.

Proper planting and regular maintenance of dogwoods is critical to produce healthy specimens. Plants which are subjected to stress become weakened and are subsequently more susceptible to a variety of pests and diseases. Dogwood anthracnose, in particular, has become a problem in our area in recent years and is characterized by large, purple-bordered leaf spots and brown patches beginning on the tips of the foliage. Prune and destroy the diseased branches and monitor the tree throughout the season, providing a deep soaking once a week during periods of drought. This disease should not be confused with spot anthracnose which appears as tiny spots the size of a pinhead all over the foliage and is promoted by damp weather, particularly in spring as the flowers open. While unsightly, this latter disease does not cause serious damage to the trees.

Another member of the dogwood family, Cornus kousa or the Japanese dogwood, is gaining in popularity due to its resistance to dogwood anthracnose. It is more densely branched and upright in habit than its American counterpart and its blossoms appear three weeks later than the American dogwoods. White flower bracts are more star-like in form and appear on the upper side of the branches once the trees have fully leafed-out. Attractive red fruits resembling clusters of raspberries appear in autumn. Peeling bark on mature specimens reveals lighter patches providing winter interest.

Hybrids known as the 'Stellar' dogwoods have been developed from crossing the American dogwood with the Japanese dogwood. Reportedly vigorous growers and resistant to both pests and diseases, they bloom in late spring and claim to have all the positive attributes of both parents.

Numerous cultivars of dogwoods are commercially available including a few weeping varieties. Flower color may be pink, red or white and several recent introductions boast variegated foliage as an added attraction.

LISTEN To Life

INSULT TO INJURY

After sustaining a head injury, patients may also experience temporary or permanent hearing loss. The first few months after the accident, the degree of hearing loss may be unstable and change. According to recent research, the hearing loss often stabilizes about one year after the head injury. In fact, one study shows that, among patients who sustained sensorineural hearing loss caused by different head injuries, nearly 90% of the cases showed no further deterioration after one year. In the remaining 10%, some changes took place after the first year, compared with hearing ability immediately after the injury. The proportion of severe hearing loss decreased while the group of people suffering milder hearing losses increased.

Even though we hear with our ears, the ability to understand what people are saying occurs in the hearing center of the brain. And there is little reason today to sit by while damage, disease, or the aging process robs you or your family member of the sounds of life. Since a simple, yet telling hearing test can be the first step toward better hearing, we invite you to call us today at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 781-337-1144, to arrange a hearing consultation here at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. We also have an office in Abington.

P.S. Sensorineural (nerve) hearing loss can often be helped with a hearing instrument.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MAY 14

At 4:13 a.m. the Libra moon becomes inactive until 8:14 a.m., when it enters Scorpio. All full moon warnings are in effect. Take it slow and easy. Eat light foods; avoid stimulants. Keep your hands and mind busy with practical projects. Mars and Neptune conjoin today; Neptune prepares to begin retrograde travel tomorrow. That means that things may not be as they appear. Separating the facts from the fiction can be difficult. Instead of numbing out through the path of least resistance, do some serious soul-searching. Let go of recent hurts or traumas. Take responsibility for your life and choices. You can achieve breakthroughs and turn your life around.

THURSDAY, MAY 15

People often have difficulty sleeping in full moon periods. As a result, they can be grouchy and difficult to get along with. This is one of those mornings. A powerful full moon culminates at 11:36 p.m. There are three factors that add to the intensity of this full moon: It is accompanied by a lunar eclipse. It is in perigee, meaning it's closest to the earth, and it culminates at 25-degrees Scorpio. In addition, Neptune, standing at 13-degrees Aquarius, begins retrograde travel. Spend time alone; strive for greater spiritual vision.

FRIDAY, MAY 16

After the barrage of planetary activity in the last few days, influences begin to ease. The moon enters cheerful Sagittarius at 7:43 a.m. However, a 90-degree alignment to Uranus occurs at 11:53 a.m. Avoid rigid time schedules; have an alternate plan of action in case things don't work out this morning. The planet Venus moves into Taurus at 6:58 a.m., remaining there until June 9. Take advantage of relatively calm astrological influences this afternoon and evening. Kick back, relax and recharge your batteries.

SATURDAY, MAY 17

Yesterday's planetary influences affect today as well. The moon continues to travel in Sagittarius, generating high energy, optimism. Spur of the moment ideas will be the most successful. Visit or entertain friends. Get back in the swing of favorite sports; start a new exercise routine. There is one pitfall in today's planetary picture. A lunar alignment to Pluto is in effect between 12:26-3:26 p.m. Be more discreet and diplomatic; insensitive remarks may come back to haunt you.

SUNDAY, MAY 18

The Sagittarius moon opposes Saturn at 4:41 a.m. and becomes inactive until 8:03 a.m., when it enters Capricorn. A harmonious alignment of Venus and Uranus saves the day, making it prime for all social activities. Group endeavors, team sports, charitable drives get the green light. You can achieve your goals by networking with others.

MONDAY, MAY 19

The planet Mercury is slowing its rate of motion, preparing for direct travel. Today Mercury forms a 90-degree alignment to Jupiter. The effect of this alignment may reinforce Mercury's retrograde action. Machinery may break down. Projects may take unexpected turns. People are likely to be careless, distracted, accident-prone. A Capricorn moon urges you to stay busy with routine chores, unfinished business.

TUESDAY, MAY 20

The big news is that Mercury begins direct travel at 3:33 a.m., 11-degrees Taurus. The next Mercury retrograde period will affect August and September. The Capricorn moon aligns with the sun at 9:29 a.m. and becomes inactive. At 11:01 a.m. the moon enters innovative Aquarius, prompting you to be more experimental. Try new methods and ideas to solve old problems. Take on new studies; expand your horizons. A lunar contact to Venus sets the stage for a social evening.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 21

The sun enters Gemini at 7:12 a.m., and the green light goes on for new starts across the board. The sun will travel in dualistic Gemini until June 21. The moon travels in Aquarius, conjoining Neptune at 10:33 a.m. Give extra attention to accuracy this morning, so that you don't overlook significant details. The moon and Mars conjoin at 5:53 p.m., making this period ideal for sports and physical activities.

THURSDAY, MAY 22

You can be most productive this morning, particularly if you are working on projects that need help or input from others. New starts in your business or personal life are recommended. Promote new ideas and launch campaigns before 2:49 p.m., when the Aquarius moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. At 5:41 p.m. the moon enters Pisces, and the last quarter phase of the moon begins at 8:31 p.m. This moon will decrease in light until May 31, when a potent new moon culminates. A lunar alignment to Uranus this evening can go either way. It may bring unexpected disruptions or exciting surprises.

FRIDAY, MAY 23

Planetary action can make for a topsy-turvy day. It can be difficult to get anything accomplished. Take it slow and easy. The moon travels in Pisces, highlighting all forms of creativity. However, 90-degree alignments of Mercury-Jupiter and the sun-Uranus are in high focus. Don't start anything new; avoid acting on impulse. Expect the unexpected.

Deal near on water sale to huge project

20-year contract for up to 300K gallons a day

By John Camera and Carol Meyer
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Water Commission is close to reaching a deal to sell up to 300,000 gallons of water a day to Erickson Retirement Communities for a planned 2,000-unit retirement campus in Hingham.

Erickson Retirement Communities has drafted a proposed letter of intent for the sale of the water. The agreement calls for a 20-year contract, with the need for water ranging from 25,000 to 307,000 gallons a day as construction is completed over the next decade.

The retirement community, which was approved for a comprehensive permit under Chapter 40B by the Hingham Zoning Board of Appeals, will be one of the largest in the state and includes a percentage of affordable units. Set on 100 acres of land off Whiting Street, the development will also include a fitness complex, aquatics center, hair salon and barbershop, full-service restaurant and casual café, medical center, bank and other amenities.

Water Commissioner Rob Kasameyer said a deal with Erickson had not been finalized but the Water Department is preparing to announce publicly that it has water to sell, which it is legally inclined to do for any sale to go forward.

Officials voice Cohasset 40B concerns to Governor's task force

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Town officials on Friday told two members of Gov. Mitt Romney's Chapter 40B Task Force that the state's affordable housing law puts too much power in the hands of developers and not enough power in the hands of the town.

Sen. Harriet Chandler and Rep. Kevin Honan, the Senate and House Chairs of the Housing and Urban Development Committee, visited Town Hall to hear concerns about the 34-year-old affordable housing law, which many say is in dire need of reform. Two local legislators who support 40B reform, Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, and Sen. Bob Hedlund, R-Weymouth, accompanied Chandler and Honan on Friday. Before coming to Cohasset, the group made a stop in Marshfield for a similar discussion.

"I think historically, if we haven't been focused on creating affordable housing, I feel it's because we've had it."
— Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris

Chandler and Honan are two of 24 people on the task force, which Romney has asked to review Chapter 40B before the Legislature debates possible changes to the law. Besides legislators, the task force includes state housing officials, municipal officials and stakeholders representing development and environmental interests. The group is scheduled to present its findings to Romney on May 30.

At Friday's meeting, representatives from the Board of Selectmen, the Planning Board, the Growth and Development Committee and the Water Commission told Chandler and Honan why they thought Chapter 40B was not working in Cohasset.

Many town officials' comments were directly related to Avalon, the planned 200-unit apartment complex now before the Zoning Board of Appeals for a comprehensive permit under 40B. That prompted Avalon Bay Estates regional vice president, Bill McLaughlin, who is also a member of Romney's task force, to stand up at the end of the meeting and claim that some of what was said was "complete misinformation."

The meeting began with Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris briefing Chandler and

Relay For Life touches many hearts

Raises $113K to fight cancer

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

When Cohasset resident Lee Anne DeVries participated in her first Relay for Life two years ago, she was in the midst of a battle against breast cancer and was bald as a result of her chemotherapy treatment.

Two years later, the 34-year-old mother of two has beaten the disease and is expecting her third child soon. Last weekend, she participated in her third Relay for Life, an event she says provided her with the positive outlook she needed to conquer cancer.

"The support that you get from the people here when you're battling cancer is huge."
— Lee Anne DeVries

"The support that you get from the people here when you're battling cancer is huge," said DeVries. "This event has been very important in my life."

The Relay for Life is the flagship fundraising event for the American Cancer Society. The all-night walkathon takes place in hundreds of town across the country and raises millions of dollars for cancer research and education.

This year marked the seventh annual relay in Cohasset, and $113,000 was raised to help fight cancer. About 650 walkers on 32 different teams participated in the event, which began Friday afternoon at the Cohasset High School track.

DeVries and 49 other cancer survivors kicked off the event with the ceremonial Survivors' Lap. Onlookers applauded as the group made its way around the track.

Later, DeVries and others took part in the Luminaria Ceremony, where about 3,000 candles were lit around the track in honor of those who had fought cancer. On the bleachers, participants spelled out the word "hope" using some of the

Selectmen want one more Avalon hearing

The Board of Selectmen will ask the Zoning Board of Appeals to have an additional hearing on Avalon after the meeting now slated for June 30. The board wants time to respond to any alternative wastewater systems that Avalon might propose.

Avalon is seeking a comprehensive permit under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law, to build a 200-unit apartment complex off Route 3A. The Water Commission has said the development's proposed wastewater plan will pollute the town's supply of drinking water.

Board of Health, May 22 at 7 p.m.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless posted otherwise.

Open Meeting Law was not broken

The Norfolk County District Attorney has ruled that no open meeting laws were violated in a late March meeting between Avalon representatives and some town officials.

The group, which at the time was dubbed a "negotiating team," met to point out the aspects of Avalon's Chapter 40B comprehensive permit application that the Zoning Board felt needed to be addressed.

The meeting took place Monday, March 24. ZBA Chairman Woody Chittick, Town Manager Mark Haddad, Selectman Michael Sullivan, Avalon vice president of development Scott Dale, Avalon counsel Steve Schwartz and a few other Avalon representatives were in attendance.

The meeting was challenged by Water Commission Chairman John McNabb, who felt that town officials were making decisions about Avalon behind closed doors.

Town Manager Mark Haddad thanked ZBA counsel Mark Bobrowski for submitting his opinion to the D.A. to prove that the open meeting law had not been violated. Haddad said it was "unfortunate" that the town would have to pay for Bobrowski's services to clear itself from the complaint.

Commute is a bear, pro-train group says

Told to write Gov. Romney

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If there is one word to describe Greenbush backers, it's frustrated.

Time after time that word was used to characterize how local commuters, who spend hours a day sitting in traffic, feel when faced with ongoing delays to the train project that would restore rail service for 17 miles along the coast from Weymouth to Scituate.

About 40 train supporters flocked to the first meeting of GOT (Greenbush on Track) Monday evening at the Scituate Country Club. GOT, which is headed by Ralph Rivkind a lawyer who commutes to Boston every day from his home in Norwell, is backed by the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, an organization that has provided unflagging support for Greenbush over two decades.

"I leave at 4:45 a.m. and it's amazing how many cars are on the road at that hour," said Trenna Baker who commutes from Hull to Boston.

Chris Fontes, who moved to Scituate from Wellesley, said his commute has become a nightmare.

"I'm tired of hearing WBZ say Route 3 hangs up at Derby Street every morning," Fontes said.

Sick of the daily commute, John Yonce, also of Scituate, said he loves where he works and he loves where he lives.

"I shouldn't have to choose one over the other," said Yonce, adding he wanted to see GOT counteract some of the information being spread by rail opponents.

Rebecca Sacks from Norwell said the commute is a health issue.

"It takes so much out of you," she said.

Kathy Treese of Cohasset said it makes no sense not having the train.

"I can't see what the negative side is," she said.

To the surprise of many at the meeting, there were a handful of Hingham residents in attendance who support the train, including Barry Doland of Main Street who takes the bus to the Red Line in Quincy every day to get to his job in Government Center. Hingham has had the most vocal opposition against Greenbush because of fears the train will hurt the Lincoln National Register Historic District that includes Hingham Square.

"Getting the train at Nantasket Junction would be a dream," Doland said, adding commuting by boat is not for him.

"I lack enthusiasm for high waves and high winds," Doland said. "You're seldom seasick on a train."

Marshfield resident Maureen Thompson, who works near the Prudential Center, described Route 3 as "the road to the rest of the world."

Depending on the traffic, Thompson spends 20-40 minutes each way driving to South Weymouth to take the train to Boston. "The boat doesn't work for me," she said.

Terry Fancher of the South Shore Chamber who sat on the Citizens Advisory Committee on Greenbush for many years, said the project wasn't on Gov. Romney's radar screen back in January and February. The MBTA halted construction in February until permitting issues on the $464 million project could be resolved. During the hiatus, Romney said he would review the project.

Fancher stressed the importance of the governor knowing the facts about Greenbush and how badly the train is needed on the South Shore.

"Greenbush On Track is all about a grassroots effort," he said. "We do want to move you to action — send emails, write letters, send faxes. The governor needs to hear there is support for the project."

Rivkind said the time has come not to let Greenbush opponents make all the noise.

"Enough is enough," he said, adding when he agreed to accept the post of GOT president, he hoped to make a difference.

"My hope is to be the voice of the silent majority," Rivkind said, pointing to a recent survey commissioned by the Chamber that showed more than 60 percent of residents in Greenbush corridor towns want the train.

GOT says it now has 200 supporters in its database including a strong contingent of officials representing labor unions who say the train will provide jobs. Several were on hand Monday, including Michael Cheney of Quincy, who hopes to persuade the Quincy City Council to endorse the project.

"From a labor, business and environmental perspective the project makes an awful lot of sense," Cheney said, adding the jobs the project would provide are critical at time when an economic resurgence is needed on the South Shore.

Tom Nash of Scituate noted the other Old Colony Lines to Plymouth and Middleboro have been successful as have the trains in other areas of greater Boston. He says Greenbush would also be a hit.

"No one is saying shut the system down because it's ineffective," he said about regions that have commuter rail. He also said the train would make the South Shore more competitive and increase property values.

There was also discussion on the access the train would provide for college and high school students commuting to Boston.

Cohasset's Martha Gjesteby, who sat on the Citizens Advisory Committee with Fancher, sported a commemorative Old Colony train pin from Sept. 26, 1997 — the day Greenbush's sister projects, the Plymouth and Middleboro lines — resumed service.

She described that day as "magnificent."

"Greenbush makes sense," Gjesteby said. "It would serve a region that desperately needs it with little disturbance."

Fire Department moves to old skating rink site

Renovations begin at Elm Street station

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Fire Department has temporarily moved to the site of the former Winter Garden Skating Rink off Route 3A. The move will allow for renovations to the garage of the Police-Fire Station.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said it would be two months before the Fire Department is back in its newly renovated home. The renovations will increase the height of the garage so firefighters can perform routine maintenance on their fire trucks while indoors. The length of the garage will also being extended so that a new ladder truck, expected to be purchased in the next few years, will fit inside the station.

Haddad said emergency phone numbers for the Fire Department will not change, as dispatchers will continue to operate out of the Police-Fire Station during renovations.

The fire Department has relocated temporarily to the former Graham Waste site off Rte. 3A. Years ago the structure housed the Winter Garden skating rink.

Zoning Advisory Committee sets agenda

The committee will also look into a proposed demolition delay for historic structures.

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The Zoning Advisory Committee (ZAC) met Tuesday night to decide which proposed bylaws or bylaw amendments it will study in anticipation of Town Meeting this fall.

The committee will look at several new bylaws that were originally included on the warrant for Town Meeting this spring, including a bylaw providing amnesty to illegal apartments in exchange for affordability and a bylaw regulating the removal of ledge. Another article that never made it to the floor of Town Meeting this spring, the "large home site plan review bylaw," will also be looked at.

In addition to those proposed bylaw changes, the Zoning Advisory Committee will investigate making changes to the town's height, setback and lot coverage requirements. Also, in the wake of the controversy surrounding 3 Jerusalem Lane, the committee will look into cleaning up the language in Section 8.7 of the bylaw, which concerns reconstruction.

Finally, the committee will look into a proposed demolition delay for historic structures. The bylaw has been suggested by the Historical Commission, and similar legislation has been passed in Duxbury and Norwell.

Suggested bylaw changes concerning cell phone tower construction, adult entertainment regulation, and the granting of apartments by right in the downtown business district will be not be looked at by the ZAC, nor will bylaws about open space residential design, performance zoning, scenic roads or creating a special flood plain.

That does not mean, however, that those bylaws may not still appear before Town Meeting this spring. It only means they will not be studied by the ZAC.

Committee member Mark DeGiacomo said the ZAC could meet as often as twice a week in the coming months in order to fully review each proposed bylaw before Town Meeting.

Officials urged to fight for school building grants

Town Manager Mark Haddad told the Town Forum last week that if the House's version of the state budget was approved, Cohasset would still need to cut some $100,000 from its operating budget.

Moreover, the town could be forced to wait even longer for state reimbursement on its new schools, because unlike Gov. Mitt Romney's version of the budget, the House budget did not contribute additional funding for school building assistance.

Haddad encouraged town officials to pick up a copy of a sample letter to Romney available at the Selectmen's office at Town Hall that encourages him to support and fight for the school building assistance fund. For more on the SBAB fund see an update from state Rep. Garrett Bradley on page 5.

Deal near on water sale to huge project

an opportunity to get a lot of cash to stabilize the (water) rates in Cohasset and allow us to do a lot of capital improvements to our water system," said Kasameyer.

Kasameyer added that the Water Commission, which has been working closely with legal counsel, was still "fact-finding" with regards to the specifics of the sale of its water. "We want to make sure that we're taking care of our asset properly," he said.

Thanks to the Aaron River Reservoir, Cohasset has a good amount of water to spare. The Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant currently pumps an average of 710 gallons a day, but its maximum capacity is almost 3 million gallons a day.

Kasameyer said selling water to Erickson could prevent any hikes in Cohasset water rates for as long as the contract lasts. The last rate increase was in 1996.

Originally, the Water Commission considered negotiating for Aquarion Water Company, which services Hingham, to give its North Cohasset water system to the Cohasset Water Department in exchange for providing water to Aquarion, instead of selling directly to the Erickson development. The deal fell through, Kasameyer said, because it would have required more spending than the commission wanted, resulting in an increase in water rates.

According to the proposed letter of intent from Erickson, 12 months prior to the termination date of the 20-year contract, the retirement community and Water Department will attempt negotiate a contract extension. However, neither party is obligated to sign a new agreement without mutually agreeable terms and conditions.

The letter of intent also states that if, during an emergency, the Cohasset Water Department is unable to supply the retirement community's usual amount of water while meeting the needs of all other customers, and Erickson has no other sources, the Water Department will supply some water in proportion to the retirement community's percentage of its total system requirements.

The Hingham Planning Board expressed concerns about the 20-year contract in a May 9 letter to the Massachusetts Environmental Protection Agency (MEPA), noting that the Erickson project "is of enormous size and has the potential for significant environmental impact," representing a 25 percent increase in the number of households in Hingham.

"It must be emphasized again that the project at full build-out would provide residential housing to over 2,000 people," Hingham Town Planner Katy Lacy wrote. "While no one can ensure that any watershed will always be able to meet demand, at least a water company is required to provide water to the service area it controls to the extent that water is available. It is an entirely different matter to contractually agree that water (need) only be supplied to a project of over 2,000 people for such a limited period of time as 20 years, with no obligation by the Town of Cohasset to agree to supply water beyond that time period. . . . It could result in a forced conversion to use of the overtaxed Weir River Watershed resources or the loss of homes for over 2,000 senior citizens."

The Hingham Planning Board further noted that the existing comprehensive permit for the Erickson project requires that the long-term water supply be provided by the proposed Taunton River desalinization plant. "While the project Proponent states that providing the water from Cohasset is consistent with the 'intent' of the permit condition, the Proponent must comply with its actual permit conditions," the letter states.

Yet, in a May 15 letter to the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, John Felix, Deputy Regional Director of the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection, wrote that the "purchase of water from the Town of Cohasset is the preferred alternative (for Erickson) to meet long-term needs."

In either case, the intent is for the imported water to be discharged to the ground in a property adjacent to the retirement community after use and treatment, thereby adding to the basin's total resources.

Previously, Erickson worked with Aquarion Water Company to come up with additional local, in-basin water sources or conservation or leak detection measures – or some combination of those three options – to supply the senior campus, but no agreement was reached.

Kasameyer said that in 20 years, aside from the proposed Taunton River plant, Erickson could also purchase water from the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority if a new negotiation could not be reached with Cohasset. "One of the key issues you have to remember here is that we're not the only source of water on the South Shore," he said.

Kasameyer stressed that no final agreement with Erickson had been reached. He declined to comment on how much revenue a 20-year deal would provide to the Water Department. He said only that the price would a competitive rate and would fund the completion of upgrades to the water system without generating rate increases. "We view this as potentially advantageous for the town," he said.

The Water Department has the legal authority to sell its water because of a special legislation that was passed after a warrant article on the matter was approved at Town Meeting in 1998.

Kasameyer said a few other proposed developments in neighboring towns had also approached the Water Department about purchasing water. He declined to name those developments or say if deals were likely, but he did say one of the developments was asking for more water than Erickson.

Officials voice Cohasset 40B concerns to Governor's task force

Honan on the history of affordable housing in Cohasset. McMorris said, in recent years, rising property values coupled with rising taxes had created an "affordability crisis." She said before the crisis, new homes in Cohasset were relatively affordable. "I think historically, if we haven't been focused on creating affordable housing, I feel it's because we've had it," she said.

McMorris reiterated the need for a moratorium on further 40B applications, a move that Cohasset residents voted for at special Town Meeting last fall. She added that the small size of the town, combined with issues like bedrock, wetlands and wastewater, made developing affordable housing particularly difficult in Cohasset. She said 40B projects, because only 25 percent of their units would be affordable, would only bring unnecessary growth to the town. For example, McMorris said, Avalon would cause the largest increase in the town's population in 30 years.

Planning Board member Bob Sturdy argued that 40B projects would only bring added costs to the Town's operating budget. "This is the type of development that where the taxes do not pay the town services," he said. "What you're talking about is the Town subsidizing the people who live in these developments at the expense of other low income residents in town."

Selectman Tom Callahan said Chapter 40B needed to allow a town to better address its local needs. Avalon Bay, he said, would strip the town of a large portion of its remaining commercial land. "(Chapter 40B) has a laudable history of developing affordable housing, but it's basically being used by developers to do things they wouldn't normally be able to do," he said.

Callahan said taking for-profit developers out of the picture would go a long way towards eliminating Chapter 40B's problems. He said the law should encourage the public sector to work with non-profit developers.

"The law is called the anti-snob zoning law because there's this perception that people in the suburbs don't want it," Callahan said. "But I think we've gotten the message, and I think there's a real need for affordable housing among people in our own town."

Planning Board member Peter Pratt said Chapter 40B gave too much power to developers because projects can be appealed to and then approved by the state after being rejected by a local Zoning Board.

"The odds are against us in negotiations, the law is not on our side attempting to do the right thing, and we simply don't have the tools," said Pratt.

Chandler said many of the issues that town officials brought up had been debated by the task force before. Still, she said, Cohasset has a desperate need of affordable housing. "You have no place for your teachers, your police, your firefighters to live, and that's a problem," she said.

McMorris informed Chandler and Honan that, according to a survey of town-owned lands by the Senior Housing Committee (SHC) a few years ago, only one town parcel was developable, a 10-acre lot behind Stop & Shop that the SHC has eyed for a senior housing development. McMorris said the town would appreciate any technical assistance from the state to help develop the land.

Rick Swanborg, Chairman of the Growth and Development Committee, said legislators should look at how other states have dealt with affordable housing. "Massachusetts is the only state with something like 40B," he said. "There's got to be a better way of getting affordable units, and there's got to be some other states that have better models."

Michael Westcott, a member of Cohasset Action, a citizen's group pushing for 40B reform, said the law was inflating the cost of available land. He said the proposed site of Avalon was inflated "by a factor of two" because 40B allows for a potential housing development there. The result, Westcott said, is that people who might want to develop the land commercially are turned off.

Westcott, who is also a member of the Growth and Development Committee, said the process for qualifying existing housing under 40B needed to be simplified. He said a moratorium was necessary until changes could be made and called for the elimination of the 10 percent affordable housing requirement set by Chapter 40B.

John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission, said that 40B needed to provide an exemption for water protection bylaws. He said allowing developers to get around bylaws that protected a town's water resource was extremely dangerous.

After town officials had spoken, McLaughlin, Avalon Bay's regional vice president and also the president of the Rental Housing Association, said town officials were wrong to make it seem like Avalon had refused to meet any of the wishes of the town.

"I have never said I wouldn't negotiate. I don't know where that came from," he said. "My hope is, as in every case, to reach a negotiation."

As for Avalon's wastewater system, which the Water Commission has said would empty into the Lily Pond watershed and thereby pollute the town's supply of drinking water, McLaughlin said: "We will solve that. If we don't, we won't build it."

ZBA hears appeal on lot that straddles town line

Neighbor says new home requires special permit

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The issuance of a building permit for a proposed home on a lot that straddles the Cohasset-Scituate border has been appealed.

After the Cohasset Zoning Board ruled that owner Brian Murphy of Otis Avenue could combine his two plots of land, which lie in two different counties, Building Inspector Bob Egan granted a conditional building permit to allow a home to be built on the Cohasset side of the lot. Murphy's current house would be torn down to make way for the new home.

But neighbor Eric Kupperstein has appealed the decision to grant the permit, saying that the Cohasset side of the lot is non-conforming according to the zoning bylaws because it does not meet width requirements. If the lot is found to be non-conforming, Murphy would need to apply for a special permit from the ZBA.

On Monday night, Kupperstein told the ZBA that if the frontage is determined to be on Gardner Road, which also borders Murphy's property and where plans indicate a driveway will be located, the lot would not meet the bylaws' 125-foot requirement for width.

The Zoning Board had a few objections to Kupperstein's point. First, the board said, the zoning bylaws make no specifications for determining where frontage is on a lot bordered by two streets. Along those lines, if Otis Avenue is considered the front of the home, the lot does not violate width requirements.

Also, Zoning Board Chairman Woody Chittick noted, the lot does not violate width requirements at all if the Cohasset and Scituate lots are viewed as one.

Kupperstein said driveway location and front door location needed to be taken into account in determining frontage. He also said the permit should not have been issued on conditional terms.

Egan said he granted the permit on the condition that more finalized plans, which would specify dimensions of the house, would be filed and reviewed before any construction began.

"Is this going to be another one of those moving targets where we're never sure what plans are going to be used?" Kupperstein asked members of the ZBA.

Egan told the board that the issuing of a conditional permit was perfectly legal. "It's a sign of the times," he said. "People need to know that a building permit can be issued before the property is sold."

Egan said the final plans could still change dramatically from the computer sketches that have been submitted, but as long as they did not require zoning relief, he would allow construction.

Kupperstein said developer Phil Ayer, the owner of 3 Jerusalem Lane, is interested in buying the property from Murphy.

The Zoning Board closed the hearing on the property and will draft a decision on Kupperstein's appeal for its June 16 meeting.

Three hearings are postponed

Controversial cases will have to wait until June

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Three controversial properties were scheduled to go before the Zoning Board of Appeals on Monday, but all three hearings ended up being postponed.

The ZBA was scheduled to hear cases on 3 Jerusalem Lane, 44 Border Street (Olde Salt House) and 226 Chief Justice Cushing Highway.

The board asked lawyers for Phil and Mary Anne Ayer, owners of 3 Jerusalem Lane, to postpone their hearing for a special permit in order to narrow down the large agenda, which originally included 16 hearings in all. (The Ayers were told on Jan. 16 by the Zoning Board to stop work on their home - nearly 80 percent complete at that point - after it was determined building inspector Bob Egan erred in issuing them a building permit.)

After rescheduling the hearing on 3 Jerusalem Lane for June 19 at 7 p.m., it appeared that the ZBA would be able to accommodate the other hearings. But the move backfired when the representatives for the other two controversial properties asked for their own postponements.

Charles Humphreys, the lawyer for the Olde Salt House, said his client needed more time to finalize the design of the restaurant's plan to use valet parking to expand its seating capacity. The Olde Salt House has also been asked to provide a traffic study.

Joseph Rosano, owner of the triangle of land at 226 CJC Highway, said he would seek advice from the Planning Board before proceeding with his hearing before the ZBA. The ZBA has said that it lacks the authority to grant Rosano a use variance, but Rosano believes he needs only a special permit to change the property from its current use as a storage ground for construction materials to a house with office space and two one-bedroom apartments.

The cases for the Olde Salt House and 226 CJC Highway and have been rescheduled to June 16 at 7 p.m.

Update on state school building grants

State Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, sponsored two school building budget amendments during the House of Representatives debate on the Fiscal Year 2004 state budget. When the budget was released from the House Ways and Means Committee, there was no funding included for first-time payments to school districts that have begun school construction projects. Bradley co-sponsored an amendment to restore $21,979,085 in the House budget, which will fund first annual payments for 19 new school construction projects, and this amendment was adopted by the House.

Across the Commonwealth, school construction projects face an uncertain future because of the current fiscal situation. The number of years a city of town must wait for state reimbursement is likely to exceed seven years. Under current state law, a city or town may only borrow for seven years before they have to begin repayment. Municipalities initially pay for these projects with borrowed money in anticipation of state reimbursement. During that waiting period, the communities pay the interest on the loan. Therefore, if the state does not begin reimbursement within seven years, the community must pay the interest and principal on the loan which could cripple their local budget. Consequently, local taxpayers could have to pay hefty payments on construction projects while the community waits for state money. Until now, school districts have been able to anticipate state money arriving within three to five years from the start of a project.

Bradley co-sponsored an amendment to address this situation which will extend the short-term loan period to 10 years in order to safeguard municipalities if the state cannot begin reimbursement as quickly as previously anticipated. Currently, there are more than 300 projects on the waiting list and their respective city or town is awaiting reimbursement from the state.

RELAY SUCCESS

The Relay For Life Cancer Walk held this past weekend was truly an amazing event to be a part of. From beginning to end, people came out to walk, share in sadness for the lost lives to this devastating illness, share in the optimism and hope that the future will bring a cure and be together to help in raising money and support. The rain stayed away and although it was cool, more than $110,000 was raised by noon on Saturday and more is to come. To all the many people who helped to make this event a success, you should be so proud of yourselves. Cancer has touched so many of us in so many ways, to see so many people come together is just amazing. We look forward to next year where we will have more survivors and more people coming to show their support to find a cure!

Walkie-talkies get fit and have fun

By Samantha Brown
CORRESPONDENT

"It's like so many things in life. It's overcoming inertia and gaining momentum."
— Joe McElroy, team leader

In an effort to promote good health and physical fitness at any age, the Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs has teamed up with the Cohasset Board of Health to sponsor a new walking club. Pending nice weather, the club meets Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays in front of the Town Hall at 9 a.m.

The program is geared toward motivating not only seniors, but also any members of the local community who are interested in beginning a slow and steady exercise program.

Kathy Bryanton, director of the Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs said Cohasset had a very successful walking program in place 10 years ago, which gradually disbanded over the years. She believes the start of this new club provides a wonderful service to the community as it promotes a safe, low impact way to lose weight and help build muscle mass. "People think you need to strain to get a good workout and it's not true," she said. "You don't need to go to an expensive gym, you can walk for free."

Team leader Joe McElroy began looking into the program after his doctor suggested he become more physically active. After showing much interest in becoming involved, he was later offered the position of team leader. Having started his own regimen, McElroy is familiar with the discipline it takes to start the habit of regular exercise. "It's like so many things in life. It's overcoming inertia and gaining momentum," he said.

He also acknowledges the fact that with a program such as this, there are going to be differences in ability. "In some cases, it's building up stamina, for some it's maintenance," he said.

What McElroy sees as another positive aspect to the program is its flexibility and no pressure approach. "We don't take attendance," he said. Members are encouraged to come as often as they'd like, whenever their schedule accommodates for it.

In the near future, McElroy hopes to gain enough participants to start a small number of sub groups based on ability and difference in physical strength, to allow each member to get the most out of their individual workout.

The program began in the newly renovated high school to provide not only climate control, but a flat walking surface as well. With the change in season, the group consensus was to move outdoors to enjoy the scenery. "To me, there is a lack of ambiance walking the corridors of the school," McElroy said. Meetings will begin outside the town hall, but McElroy has noticed many prospects for flat walking paths around town.

Louis Fair, a member of the group originally joined at the urging of his wife to "get out and get active," but has come to find a rewarding social aspect as well. He and McElroy live on the same street, yet they only met recently as a result of coming together through this group. Also, as an African-American in a small town with limited diversity, Fair feels being involved opens to door to all topics of discussion. "We talk about lots of stuff," he said. "It's helping the community get to know itself better."

This program is part of a larger effort being made by the Cohasset Board of Health to promote walking, which includes expansion of sidewalks and walking paths, and the offering of more organized opportunities for physical activity. Chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health, Steve Bobo notes the alarming rise in cases of obesity and believes the combination of too much junk food coupled with a lack of physical exertion has led to what he deems to be a "health crisis."

Bobo feels it is very important for the board to stand behind and "sponsor programs to promote walking," for people of all age groups. "If you don't use it, it'll rust," he said.

He too is hopeful the program will expand to accommodate many levels and abilities. "We'd love to have a regular group of high energy walking," he said.

In addition to the walking club, Bryanton said the Council on Elder Affairs also offers exercise classes at 7:30 a.m. and is always looking for ways to start new programs. "We're interested in hearing from people about what they're interested in," she said.

As with any exercise program, it is advised to consult your doctor before beginning. McElroy advises that participants "know their limits and check with their doctor if they haven't been walking in some time" and "get advice on how to build up their stamina."

For more information on how to become involved in the walking program, please contact either Steve Bobo at (781) 383-1420 or Joe McElroy at (781) 383-0505.

Entrepreneur sails into the shipping business

UPS Store to open in June

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

"I'm still young enough to open up a business, work for myself and enjoy that opportunity."
— Gary Powell, store owner

The UPS Store "uniform" of golf shirt, khaki pants and sneakers its going to suit Gary Powell just fine because the 48-year-old entrepreneur is going to be doing a lot of running around in the coming months.

Although his new UPS Store at Shaw's Plaza is going in where Cohasset Travel was formerly located and isn't slated to open until the beginning of June, customers are already flocking in.

Last week, while carpenters were hard at work transforming the former travel office into a space that will include mailboxes, photocopying services, a retail section and shipping area — several people arrived with questions or packages in hand.

"That's no problem – we can handle that," Powell told a woman looking to see if UPS could ship a 50-inch long cedar chest to North Carolina. With a friendly smile and wishes to come back soon, Powell sent others with packages in tow to Thompson's Business Services on Front Street in Scituate Harbor which uses UPS.

Although the black banner with the familiar gold UPS logo on the storefront is attracting customers a few weeks ahead of schedule, Powell does have a knack for good timing.

Powell won't have a Mail Boxes Etc. identity crisis and will open as a UPS store. Discovering the UPS name drastically increased shipping volume, UPS is allowing existing Mail Boxes Etc. franchises (UPS acquired the company two years ago) to convert to UPS stores.

The Duxbury resident is no stranger to Cohasset. He owns a Flying Scot sailboat and has sailed out of the Cohasset Yacht Club. He's also visited many of the businesses in town over the past few months to let them know about the services his store will offer.

After a 25-year career in wholesale building materials distribution, Powell decided to branch out on his own. He researched opening a franchise and intentionally steered away from the fast-food business.

"My work history in sales and marketing could be better put to use in this type of business," he says. "And I'm still young enough to open up a business, work for myself and enjoy that opportunity."

Powell refinanced his house to pay for his new venture. During a tour of the store, which is still under construction, Powell enthusiastically described the state-of-the-art photocopiers that will be installed and networked into his computer system. That means a customer can email a document to Powell that will then be printed with the highest quality copies. In the back of the store, Powell also pointed out the "popcorn machine" that will funnel the packing material into boxes in an assembly line setup.

Those who rent mailboxes will have special security access at the store so they can check their mailbox 24 hours a day. Those who purchase pre-paid cards can also make copies after hours.

In addition to himself, Powell will have a staff of three and anticipates hiring two employees over the next three-to-six months.

Choosing the Cohasset location was no accident, he says. UPS market research revealed there was a real need for this type of service in Cohasset. The other best local site was off Route 18 in Weymouth. For Powell, the decision was an easy one.

"Twenty-two thousand cars go by there during the business day," Powell says. "The access is excellent, in Weymouth it was more difficult. And there's plenty of parking." In addition to Cohasset, he expects to draw customers from Scituate, Norwell, Hingham and Hull.

To prepare to open his own store, Powell completed 80 hours of training, including two weeks in San Diego and two weeks in the UPS Store in Pembroke. About 50 percent of the business will be packing and shipping, 30 percent from document services and retail sales of office supplies, and 20 percent from mailbox rentals.

If all goes well in Cohasset, Powell's goal is to open more UPS store franchises after a year or two.

Cohasset Relay For Life touches many hearts candles. After Cohasset resident Lily Sestito sang "Amazing Grace," a bagpiper led relay participants in a procession.

For DeVries, the event was a somber reminder of her battle with cancer, but it was also a chance to provide others with the same kind of encouragement and community support that helped her beat the disease two years ago.

DeVries was diagnosed with breast cancer at the age of 32, without any history of the disease in her family. "I had never heard of anybody under the age of 40 or 50 being diagnosed, so I thought it was impossible," she said.

After finding out DeVries had cancer, her lifelong friend, Laurie Greenip, decided to enter the Relay for Life with a team in her honor. Lee Anne's Team, as the group was called, was made up of 50 people who wanted to support DeVries in her fight against breast cancer.

"She was really, really touched that this had all been done in her honor," said Greenip, who this year served as the Event Chair of the relay. "I think it gave her something to focus on that was a positive thing. When you get sick, you tend to focus on negative things."

A year later, having undergone six months of chemotherapy and six months of radiation treatment, DeVries participated in her second Relay for Life cancer-free. Lee Anne's Team grew in size to 88 people as DeVries' friends and family celebrated her beating the disease. "I just think I had so much support that I kept a positive attitude, and I think that was huge," she said.

Greenip, who grew up with DeVries in Cohasset, said watching her participate in the Survivors' Lap when she still had cancer was an incredibly emotional experience. "I don't think any of her friends had a dry eye," she said. "This year, it was more like, 'Yes, she beat this thing!' It was a great feeling."

DeVries said she would participate in the Relay for Life for the rest of her life. "I'm only two years out of treatment and to see people that were newly diagnosed, it's emotional, because it brings you back to when you were diagnosed," she said. "Once you've been through it, you want to help other people go through it."

Greenip said relay participants will gather May 28 at Second Congregational Church on Highland Avenue, where prizes will be awarded to the best overall fundraising team, the team with best per member fundraising average, the best individual fundraiser, the team with the most team spirit and the team with the best decorated campsite.

OPINION

'Lest we forget...'

Come Monday, many Cohasset veterans will shake the dust off their old uniforms, breathe deeply as they fasten tired buttons over a little more girth around the middle than they had when they were younger, and don caps that represent the Navy, Air Force, Army, Marines, Merchant Marines or Coast Guard.

Some will practice a salute in the mirror before they head out the door, while others will pause as they pin on each medal and remember the day, the event, and the memories it conjures up.

As they assemble to march through the town cemeteries and down North and South Main streets and Elm Street to Veterans Memorial Park — to the cheers of the crowd and hundreds of children waving small American flags — these soldiers share in a bond that began with the very first Memorial Day 135 years ago.

These Cohasset men and women, many of whom are getting on in years, share the pride of having served their country and the deep humility that only comes with having survived while others have not.

The traditional Memorial Day observances that have become legend in Cohasset continue Monday as they have for years. A band of soldiers will report to the George H. Mealy American Legion Post #118 on Summer Street at 7 a.m. for breakfast and camaraderie before boarding a bus to North Cohasset, the first stop in a long morning of remembrances. There they will visit the North Cohasset cemetery and memorial honor roll.

Then it's back on the bus to Woodside Cemetery; from there they go to Beechwood Cemetery and then to the Music Circus at 10:30 a.m. where the parade assembles.

Post Commander Steve Wigmore said there are three bands this year, including the Cosmos Band from Brockton, the Rusty Skippers and middle-high school band. The parade, which also includes Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts and a contingent from the DAR in Civil War garb, marches on to Central Cemetery at Joy Place, the World War I Honor Roll on the Common, the POW/MIA memorial at Depot Court and finally to Veterans Memorial Park in the harbor.

As the soldiers head down Elm Street and reach the bend just before Cohasset Harbor Inn, emotions build. The 50 state flags and six service flags, along with the American flag, will be flying high in the wind around the Veterans Park. The grass is so green there and the harbor will be glistening in the background. The crowd also thickens as dozens cheer and applaud the veterans passing by.

At Veterans Park patriotic music will play, Major Philip J. Mahoney, US Marine Corps (retired), will give the keynote speech, and the poem "In Flanders Fields" will be read, once again.

There will be references to Sept. 11, the nation's war on terrorism and to the thousands of new American soldiers still in harm's way in far away places, such as Iraq, Afghanistan, Kosovo, Bosnia and South Korea. The night before, local veterans will again serve one-hour shifts keeping a continuous vigil from dusk to dawn at Veterans Park to honor all soldiers past and present.

Reacting to the speeches and patriotic music some soldiers will wipe away tears, while others stare into the distance. Youngsters will gather around on their bicycles — and in awe of the proceedings, some will also salute. Grownups will put their hands over their hearts.

As the observances come to an end, many will make their way up Border Street to Government Island for free soft drinks, hot dogs and hamburgers, courtesy of the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation.

Cohasset veterans will visit at the legion post and share old stories.

Later, when they put their uniforms back into the closet for another year, they will be comfortable with the knowledge their town hasn't forgotten what it all means.

Train would hurt postcard towns

TO THE EDITOR:

Larry Lindner provided the Journal with a copy of his letter to Gov. Mitt Romney for publication.

Dear Governor Romney:

Stopping the car to let a mother duck lead her young brood across the road; being chatted up by strangers and friends alike as you walk the dog or go about your errands in town; receiving home-cooked meals from neighbors when a new baby is brought home from the hospital or someone dies; listening to the sonorous ringing coming from the town's bell tower Tuesday evenings as you prepare dinner. These are the reasons the Greenbush line should not be built.

I'm sure the economic and environmental toll Greenbush would take has been told to you over and over — so much money spent per rider; so many noxious fumes spewed per ride. But it's the cost that can't be quantified, the cost of a way of life that could never be recaptured, that might be the highest of all.

As someone who lived till age 28 in New York City, perhaps I am more keenly aware than some who have spent their whole lives along the Greenbush corridor that we are living in a postcard. And it's more than two-dimensional. The spectacular beauty of Boston's South Shore coastal towns — street after street of antiques houses, lovely ponds and woods, the ever-beckoning bay and ocean — is truly matched by the friendly, easy pace of life here, by the way people are happy to get along. If the train comes barreling through, that's gone. It's not about a tunnel through Hingham Square. It's not about two-quadrant versus four-quadrant gates. It's not about blowing or not blowing the horn. It's about a certain pace of life, a tempo that would change everything.

Some might say that I'm overreacting in advance, that all the train would do is make it easier to get from point A to point B without impacting in any other way on the nature of the South Shore coastal communities. But that is not true. Trains do change things, especially since this is not the choo choo train of yore.

Before my wife and I chose the South Shore as our home, we looked at several other towns in the Boston area: Wellesley, Concord, Winchester, and so on. Yes, those towns have trains that make for easier commuting to Boston. And yes, they're lovely. But strangers aren't apt to say hello to you there. They don't smile as freely. They're not as patient about waiting in their cars as you cross the street. They don't make small talk.

How do I know? I checked. My wife and I walked around those and similar towns many, many times before deciding to trade a little convenience for a nicer way of life. And we were never sorry. My wife's first encounter after we moved here was with a shop owner who chided her for choosing a bag of chips and a soda as her lunch. Mine was at the electric company: the clerk told me what a lovely home I was moving into (a modest cape) when she saw my new address. Soon after we moved in, we found a lost dog from Cohasset, and when we drove to the center of the village there well after dark, a woman who knew the town well had us follow her in her car along back roads to an address we never would have found on our own.

I imagine it's that way for many people on the South Shore, that they have their own warm stories to tell. That is, the extra time commuting isn't a problem. It's a choice they make precisely because they appreciate a milder pace, a more relaxed atmosphere. It hearkens back to a gentler period in history, one you can feel here, not just see in all the old houses and well-preserved town layouts.

Please, Governor Romney, don't rip up the postcard. Don't yank away the living history by speeding "progress" toward us. You're too recognizable to enjoy the feel of the South Shore coastal towns incognito, but send anyone you know and trust to spend a Saturday afternoon or a spring or summer evening here, and they'll come back telling you what I have.

Thanks for supporting Cohasset Relay For Life

TO THE EDITOR:

As the regional executive for development for the American Cancer Society's (ACS) seventh annual Relay For Life in Cohasset, I want to take a moment to sincerely thank the residents of Cohasset and surrounding towns who helped make this event so successful. I would like to extend a special thanks to the residents in the immediate vicinity of the school who so graciously share their neighborhood with us each year.

The event was held at Cohasset High School and drew more than 650 walkers, 32 teams and raised more than $112,000 to help fight cancer, aid in research, and continue the ACS's efforts at providing patient and family support, advocacy, as well as education and awareness programs.

I would especially like to acknowledge the cancer survivors who participated in the opening "Survivor's Lap." They are the reason we continue to fight because each year, there can be more and more people living wonderful lives following a diagnosis of cancer. They are the hope and inspiration to all those who have been newly diagnosed.

The community involvement was overwhelming and a tribute to the true spirit of volunteerism and hard work. Thanks to this effort, those with cancer and their loved ones will continue to receive the support and assistance that can help make their days brighter, while giving them the hope that soon a cure will be found.

Your American Cancer Society is here in our community, ready to help. If you need information on cancer or patient services, please contact ACS any time, 24 hours a day—seven days a week at 1-800-ACS-2345; or online at www.cancer.org.

Remember, it's not too early to become involved in Relay For Life 2004. Again, thank you for supporting the American Cancer Society.

Three-part fight plan is needed

LOGAN VIEW

MARY ANN FRYE

The citizen campaign to get Logan airport to pursue its business consistent with public health and long-established residential land use on the South Shore is one of the most sustained, intelligent and collegial volunteer outpourings that I have seen. What keeps me going as a volunteer — right after the need to defend my home — is the quality of effort of the other volunteers. Each is a hero to me

Many volunteers report that friends say to them, "I'm not in a position to do what you are doing, but I want you to know how much I appreciate it." This has happened to me, and the truth is, we need you. You can become one of the heroes by making donations of money, to inspire the people who are making donations of time.

Money is needed to make the legal underpinnings of our argument. By donating, you build the core of facts and deploy it to protect our quality of life. Volunteers are doing a fine job of strategy and communication. The legal case must be made by professionals. We have an effective presence in the courts, and we need money to keep it.

You can start to help today. There is a raffle of a Bermuda vacation going on right now. You can buy one or more of the 500 chances before the drawing on June 20. You can help to sell the tickets, too.

I'm learning that a righteous civic cause has at least three parts. There is the problem to be solved. There are the volunteers who notice the problem, research it and spread the news. There is the political and legal context through which the case must be successfully moved. The third part requires money. It is heady and encouraging to see how our little region has defended its health and environment with a torrent of civic virtue. Please encourage us with a torrent of donations.

Aliens among us — and the natives are restless

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

One year's seeding,
Seven years weeding.
Old gardening adage

My backyard lawn is a forest of Norway maple sprouts. Not that there's anything unusual about Norways. We have them all over town. They "green" our roadsides, dot our parks, shade our backyards. Fast growing, but not overwhelming in size, they are a popular town (every town) Tree and Park Department choice, resistant to dust, dirt, car emissions, road salt, insects, blights, pretty much all the things that attack so many plants. But, therein lies the problem. The Norway maple, of European origin, is one of the non-native species that thrive so well they've become problems on our landscape, crowding out the unique indigenous flora.

More than one third of New England's 3,000 plant species are non-natives, though fewer than 200 pose problems. Known by many labels, including aliens, exotics, invasives and aggressives, non-native plants are, in the simplest terms, plants that were introduced into an environment in which they did not evolve and in which no natural enemies limit their production and spread.

Characteristically, these aliens, many of Eurasian origins (though even a plant native to the United States can be considered an alien if it occurs outside of its historical natural range), exhibit rapid growth, high reproduction rates, early maturation, long-seed life, generalized adaptation, highly successful seed dispersal, spines and/or thorns to repel animals and humans, and roots and rhizomes with extensive food reserves. All of which add up to survival for them, but potential trouble for indigenous plants. Invasives interfere with crop production, alter soil chemistry and often poison the soil for native plants, thus reducing habitat for native wildlife. Invasives alter water flow, reduce water, space, sunlight and nutrients for natives, hybridize with natives and generally threaten biodiversity. Despite the fact that many alien plants have become naturalized and are now considered part of our ecosystems, they are still classified as aliens because they were introduced by humans, rather than by natural means.

Just how did the non-natives get here? Many came accidentally in the ballast water of ships or in Colonial cargoes, but many more were brought in deliberately, as ornamental plantings for gardens, for medicinal and agricultural purposes and as "living fences" for erosion control and wildlife habitat. Over the generations, the hardiest of these opportunistic plants have escaped and colonized vast areas, areas that we humans have disturbed with our clear cutting, our subdivisions, highways and salt marsh dredging. In many places, the aliens form exotic monocultures that replace native plants. Even with eradication methods (which can be costly), removal simply makes way for the next invasive to colonize the area.

Unaware of the ecological implications of alien species, many of us continue to contribute to the degradation of the historic American landscape by planting and admiring aliens, still readily available at garden centers. Next to habitat destruction, the biggest threat facing our landscape is invasive species, followed by pollution, over-exploitation and disease.

Lest anyone think I'm pointing the finger, I confess that I am an offender, able to count at least six different invasives in my yard — all of which I "cultivate" (several of which I planted) because I like the plants and think them attractive. However, as I learn more about the importance of native plants to the landscape, I'll be making some changes, the first of which has been to remove one of the two large burning bushes in the yard. Though I'll miss its blaze of fall leaves, and the sparrows (another alien) will miss it as a place to congregate, we've opened up a little more space for the native pumpkins and squash we plan to add to this year's crop.

So, who are some of these aliens among us? Perhaps the most visible of the invaders is the perennial Purple Loosestrife (Lythrum salicaria) whose deceptive beauty invades natural and disturbed ponds, reservoirs, drainage ditches, marshes and waterways. Introduced in ship ballast nearly two centuries _ago, this showy plant of European origin was known to have antibacterial properties and was used to treat wounds and sores and to stop bleeding.

Growing aggressively, up to 10 feet tall in dense stands (80,000 stalks per acre have been reported), a single plant, from which 30 to 50 stems may arise, produces more than 3,000 flowers on 12-inch spikes and up to two million seeds in a single season. Classified in many states as a noxious weed (a pest subject to restrictions) though in other states it is available from nurseries as an ornamental, loosestrife blooms from July to September, crowding out native cattails, grasses and sedges, clogging ponds and rivers, but providing no food value whatsoever for birds, fish, turtles or mammals.

Another showy invasive is the prolific Multiflora rose (Rosa multiflora) whose blankets of creamy-white flowers in late spring and early summer impart a delicious fragrance on a warm day. Swelling just beneath the flowers are the rose hips, red and rich in vitamin C, which develop over the course of the summer and are a food source for birds and mammals. In turn, the birds and mammals disperse the seed which can remain viable for years.

I have two plants in the yard and find that I can control them by cutting them back severely in the spring and trimming the canes throughout the summer. Introduced from Japan to the East Coast in the 1860s, the rose has been used as rootstock for ornamental roses, as a "living fence' to confine livestock, for erosion control and a crash barrier and glare reduction barrier on highway median strips. The dense, thorny tangle of arching canes acts as a wildlife cover for rabbit, quail, pheasant and songbirds including mockingbirds and catbirds who often nest safely just a few feet off the ground in the thicket.

Usually found in fields and along roadsides, the rounded shrub adapts to a wide range of environments where it is an aggressive competitor for soil nutrients, though it can be argued that it has its few, at least, redeeming qualities.

Japanese Knotweed (Polygonum cuspidatum)

Purple Lossestrife (Lythrum salicaria L.)

Another invasive is the tall, herbaceous perennial that can be seen along the Beal Street railroad line. Until just a few years ago, I though it was bamboo. Though it often goes by the name Mexican bamboo, this plant with the alternately arranged heart-shaped leaves and the round, hollow, reddish-brown stems is Japanese knotweed (Polygonum cuspidatum), a member of the buckwheat family. Found in moist open habitats, knotweed is a native of Asia and came to the United States, from England, about a century ago, as an ornamental for landscape screening. After escaping from cultivation, it has spread extensively in the wild and is now found from Nova Scotia south to the Carolinas. Once used in folk medicine as a laxative, knotweed has also been used as a food, its young shoots and leaves a favorite in China.

Emerging in early spring, knotweed grows rapidly, reaching heights of 10 feet, shading out other plants and aggressively competing for water and nutrients. It spreads quickly by way of creeping, 45- to 60-foot rhizomes that can regenerate from the smallest of fragments. The dense thickets, with their greenish-white sprays of tiny flowers, are virtually indestructible once established.

Next month, more invasives, including Porcelain berry (all over my yard), Rosa rugosa (my all-time favorite rose) and English ivy (I have a woods filled with it).

JFK chalks up another

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Surprise!

Jack Kennedy had another affair.

That breathless item has become the "dog bites man!" of the 21st century in the news business.

This time we are eternally grateful to the New York Daily News for outing Marion Beardsley Fahnestock, now a grandmother and church administrator, as the "Mimi" who kept Jack's spirits up from June, 1962, to November, 1963.

I don't think I could have stood another minute of ignorance of the subject because mine is an inquiring mind that wants to know important things like that so he can only vote for celibates for the Corner Office.

Thus another name is added to the growing list of JFK's conquests.

The whole thing started when historian Robert Dallek published his book, "An Unfinished Life: John F. Kennedy, 1917-1963," a rather scholarly biography of our 36th president.

Hidden away in the 700 pages was a brief mention of "a tall, slender, beautiful" college student named "Mimi" who had "a special relationship with the president," including an internship at the White House that took her on trips with JFK.

"(She) wasn't in the office very long before the press began to ask why she was there and what she was doing because Mimi had no skills," said Barbara Gamarekian, a Kennedy aide who was Dallek's source for the Mimi story.

"She couldn't type. She could answer the phone and she could handle messages and things, but she was not really a great asset to us."

Dangling tantalizing innuendoes like that in front of a tabloid editor is like waving a red flag in front of a sex-crazed bull and, before you could say Judith Campbell, Daily News staffers had fanned out to find Mimi, not a particularly difficult task.

She turned out to be Marion Fahnestock, now 60, an administrator at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, a widow with two grown daughters, and a graduate of Miss Porter's School in Connecticut (Jackie Kennedy's old school, too) and Wheaton College in Norton.

She readily admitted it, then closed the door hoping it would go away.

"For the last 41 years, it is a subject that I have not discussed," she said. "In view of the recent media coverage, I have now discussed the relationship with my children and my family, and they are completely supportive. I will have not further comment on this subject."

Thus another name is added to the growing list of JFK's conquests.

The last one we learned about was Marlene Dietrich, she of the million dollar legs, whose meeting with the president was described in the New Yorker magazine excerpts of the journals of the critic Kenneth Tynan.

Dietrich, who must have been at least 60 at the time, was in Washington for an awards ceremony at 7 p.m. when she was invited to the White House for drinks at 6:30 p.m.

"It was all over sweetly and very soon," Tivnan quoted Dietrich as telling him. "And then he went to sleep. I looked a my watch and it was 6:50."

Now if someone will only put names to the "two 20-minute sessions with a mother and daughter during a party at which (Jackie) was also in attendance," as described by Sarah Bradford in "America's Queen: The Life of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis."

Like I say, inquiring minds want to know.

Cuckoos - a boon to those caterpillar haters out there

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

For some, "cuckoo" conjures up an image of a decorative clock with a door that opens every hour to let a small mechanical bird emerge to say "cuckoo" as many times as the hour is long. For others it is a slangy way to suggest craziness or foolishness. For birders, cuckoos are birds. American cuckoos are slender birds about a foot in length with long tails and slightly decurved bills. Their silhouette shows a continuous line curving from their beak over their head and down their back to their tail with no indentation for a neck. They are zygodactylous, meaning that two toes point forward and two backward. Most songbirds have three toes pointing forward and one backward. Black-billed and Yellow-billed Cuckoos are found in New England, and the Mangrove Cuckoo is found in the mangrove swamps of Florida. Other birds included in the same family, but very different in looks and behavior, are the southwestern Greater Roadrunner of cartoon fame, and the more tropical anis, which are black chunky-billed birds.

Although the Black-billed and Yellow-billed cuckoos are similar in looks, there are distinct differences. They both are brown above and white below. Both have white spots showing on the under side of the tail, but these are larger in the Yellow-billed, which also has more rufous color in its wing feathers. As you might expect, the Black-billed has a totally black bill. In the Yellow-billed, only the upper mandible is black, while the lower mandible is yellow. Adult Black-billed Cuckoos have a red eye ring.

Brood parasitism refers to the practice of laying eggs in the nests of other birds in order not to have to raise one's own young. The Common Cuckoo found in Europe does not build nests and always lays its eggs in other birds' nests. As many as 25 eggs may get distributed around into nests of smaller birds. American Black-billed and Yellow-billed Cuckoos practice brood parasitism only rarely and then usually only in nests of other cuckoos. Parasitic cuckoos have developed an amazing adaptation by which they can alter the size and coloration of their eggs to mimic those of the host species. It is not clearly understood just how this is accomplished. Some think a female cuckoo will lay eggs similar to the eggs of the host species that reared her, creating cuckoo clans or "gentes".

The habits of the European Common Cuckoo point up the close relationship of the words cuckoo and cuckold. References to this connection can be found in the writings of more than one author. One example is from Shakespeare's "Love's Labour's Lost":

"The cuckoo, then, on every tree,
Mocks married men; for thus sings he,
Cuckoo!
Cuckoo! cuckoo! O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear!"

Both of our cuckoos are shy birds, most often seen skulking in the bushes, or heard but not seen. The song of the Black-billed Cuckoo is a soft repeated "cu-cu-cu" or "cu-cu-cu-cu". Yellow-billed Cuckoos have a more elaborate song, somewhat guttural in quality, speeding up at the beginning, then slowing down. It sounds like "ka-ka-ka-ka-ka-ka-ka-ka-ka-kow-kow-kowp-kowp-kowp". Only the European Common Cuckoo calls "CUCK-oo" in the two-syllable sound we associate with cuckoo clocks.

Cuckoos love caterpillars. This means they consume vast quantities of gypsy moths and tent caterpillars. They especially seem to enjoy hairy caterpillars, although they eat many other insects, as well as berries, tree frogs, lizards or even bird eggs. In years of large infestations of caterpillars, cuckoos tend to lay more eggs and hatch more young.

The number of Yellow-billed Cuckoos is declining rapidly in the west. They no longer breed in Washington, Oregon or British Columbia, and only 50-100 pairs are left in California. Loss of riparian habitat and forest fragmentation is speeding up the decline. Efforts to get the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service to declare the Yellow-billed Cuckoo a federally endangered species have so far not been successful. They have put it on the "warranted, but precluded" list, an action that the Center for Biological Diversity considers a delaying tactic by the Bush administration. There is fear that this species will become extinct in California before it receives federal protection under the Endangered Species Act.

Hingham still has cuckoos, although it usually takes some patience and quiet listening to find them. I have seen them at Turkey Hill, in Wompatuck State Park, at World's End, and at Triphammer Pond. Not only are they interesting birds to look at and listen to, but their dietary choices are to be commended!

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

The Battle of the Bulger proves that Mitt Romney is no Bill Weld — at least not yet.

Weld began his career as successful Massachusetts politician saying it was time for Bulger to go. He knew how little regard the voters had for the then-Senate president, and used Bulger to personify what the Republicans said was wrong with Beacon Hill.

Over time, though, Weld learned that if you want to get anything accomplished at the Statehouse, you can't take a permanent posture of Democrat-deriding, because you need their votes. Bulger and Weld became allies, and friends. Weld appointed Bulger president of UMass — setting up Romney's campaign a decade later to once again demonize, and dismiss, the longtime South Boston pol.

By filing a specific plan to eliminate Bulger's office, Romney made clear to the political world he's not interested in making accommodations with the culture over which Bulger has long held sway. At the very least, in a political sense, he insists on inflicting some damage on Democratic lawmakers. They'll be required, or at least one branch will, to take an up-or-down vote on keeping Bulger's office in existence.

Later on, Romney may pay more dearly later than Weld ever did. Over time, he may learn it's better to leave some fights alone. But he may believe the GOP gains more by losing than winning this one. If he can convert a few races like last week's special election in Braintree from "surprisingly close" to "a victory for the Republican," Romney's party could wind up with enough of the, currency it takes to get along on Beacon Hill – votes. He can do that partly by fighting for his principles and losing to the Democratic powers that be.

Romney submitted his reorg plan in such a way that it's not clear what he wants politically, a defeat or a victory, but it's almost sure what he's going to get.

By handing everything but the higher ed piece over to legislators in one 700-page document, the governor practically assured a majority in at least one branch will find enough objectionable elements to reject the document as a whole. That's all it will take to kill it; the 700-page reorg has to be approved in its entirety and can't be amended.

Passage would be the biggest political surprise in many, many years on Beacon Hill. The question is, will defeat be a win or a loss for Romney? The answer comes in layers. First: there's how the vote is played in the media, either as the Democrats stymieing reform or as Romney ineffectually proposing defective schemes. Second, there's how the public – most of which spends about five minutes a week contemplating state government news – perceives the outcome. That's unknowable. Commonsense suggests that with good sound bites, Romney can deliver the message that the Democrats don't want to help him clean things up. The less subtle the message, the better.

Most likely, Romney's in a can't lose situation: if the reorg passes, he led the Democrats into fixing the government. If it goes down to defeat, he tried to fix things but the Democrats wouldn't let him. But voters are wriggly. They have a way – and a history – of removing the apostrophe-t from "can't lose."

As always, the week after House passage of the budget brought second-look stories.

• House budget includes provision to raise t fares — Michael Levenson of the News Service reported that the House plan includes language overriding a state law. That statute prevents the MBTA from raising fares if ridership has decreased 4 percent in the previous 12 months. Ridership has gone down 3 percent since last April, but the T says it needs a fare increase to cope with the current budgetary realities in state government. Senate action is still needed on the provision.

• Kriss says House plan could require deep Medicaid cuts — Romney Administration and Finance chief Eric Kriss said the House budget is up to $300 million out of balance. He said it fails to cover a $191 million deficit in the Children and Seniors account and projects Medicaid savings that won't actually occur. House Ways and Means Chairman John Rogers, D-Norwood, said Kriss is incorrect.

• Tourism officials decry raid of fund — Leaders of the state's third-largest industry, already hurting from Sept. 11 and the recession, said their efforts to turn things around will be hurt by the House plan. It contains language diverting $2.9 million in a tourism-support fund to the Prescription Advantage program for senior citizens. Gov. Romney wants to insulate state tourism spending from cuts, saying the tax revenues generated by tourism are too important to sacrifice.

• With debate nearing, local officials ask for ways, means — Rep. Philip Travis, D-Rehoboth, conceded a major political point in this tough fiscal year: if cities and towns want the power to raise levies like the meals tax, they're probably going to have to accept a requirement for local referenda first. The Taxation Committee took testimony on various measures like Travis', which would allow an increase in the meals tax from 1 to 3 percent. "If it takes a ballot question, then that's what we'll have to do," he said, acknowledging the administration's insistence on referenda could well hold sway in the Legislature.

• Senate won't adopt court closures — Senate President Travaglini said the Senate will propose requiring administration approval for the hiring of any outside lawyer by the government and regular reporting on government legal contracts. The Senate will also seek to shake up the trial court management structure and create a court reform advisory board. The Upper Branch, like the House, is not inclined to close courthouses or create a Solicitor General's office, as Romney had proposed.

• Democrat wins Braintree House seat — A former prosecutor and former legislative staffer was elected Tuesday to fill the House seat vacated earlier this year when Rep. Joseph Sullivan, D-Braintree, resigned to become head of the State Lottery. Joseph Driscoll, a Braintree Democrat, won the special election by collecting 500 votes more than Republican Matthew Sisk for whom Gov. Mitt Romney and other GOP leaders had stumped.

• Convention designated special security site — It's not clear how much extra money the city will get to run the $49.5 million Democratic National Convention in Boston, but Secret Service agents have already been scoping the city and now, with official designation as a National Special Security event, the convention is likely to be the focus of extra money and person power from Washington. It's the first national political event since Sept. 11, 2001.

• Economic news poor in first quarter, UMASS says — The Donahue Institute at UMass Boston released a study estimating the Massachusetts economy declined 1.8 percent in the first quarter of 2003, the biggest slump since the end of 2001. The hopeful note: "Conditions may improve, now that the war in Iraq is over. There are some signs of a turnaround in technology spending, which is a necessary condition for the Massachusetts recovery to begin," said Dr. Adam Clayton-Matthews of the Massachusetts Benchmarks project. Clayton-Matthews said he can't see the economy adding jobs until next year.

• Con Con won't meet again for six months — The House and Senate gaveled into joint session for consideration of constitutional amendments, and immediately gaveled out. So supporters of a ban on gay marriage, and other proposals such as a biennial state budget, will have to wait until Nov. 12, the date set for the next session. Amendments may be considered this year or in 2004, the second year of this two-year legislative session.

• Transportation chief: big dig's nice, mass transit's nicer — Though they will spend $14 billion-plus building the Big Dig and lauding their own work, state transportation officials had a conflicting message: don't drive. "There's no shame in building a good road, that's a safe road that helps people get around. Nor is there shame in having a bridge that isn't going to fall down," state Transportation Secretary Daniel Grabauskas said. "But where we can afford commuters the option, whether it's a bus route, a boat, or a train, I think that's great." Meanwhile, the Transportation Committee heard Rep. Anne Paulsen's, D-Belmont, bill to expand the Safe Routes to School program, which encourages kids to walk. It's good for their health, youngsters told to the committee.

• Minuteman saved; will get facelift — With merchandise sales slumping, UMass officials had considered replacing the venerable Minuteman mascot, perhaps with a gray wolf (though that species isn't native to Massachusetts.) But an outcry, including a legislative proposal by UMie Sen. Guy Glodis, D-Worcester, to statutorily protect the Minuteman, led school leaders to announce they'll revamp, but retain, their logo.

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on four roll calls from recent sessions dealing with the House version of the state's $22.5 billion fiscal 2004 state budget. There were no roll call votes in the House or Senate last week.

IMPACT OF RULES AND REGULATIONS (H 4000)

House 108-44, approved an amendment requiring state regulatory agencies to file a "regulatory impact statement" prior to most of their proposed new rules and regulations taking effect. Both current law and the amendment require an estimate of the rules and regulations' fiscal effect on the public and private sector over a five-year period. The amendment expands the current law and requires more specifics including explaining how the new regulation was developed, identifying specifically who is affected and to what extent and describing specifically the benefits of the regulation. The amendment also prohibits any regulation from being in effect for more than five years unless the agency files a new regulatory impact statement and provides a new public comment period. Amendment supporters said these stricter requirements would ensure that agencies consider the specific effects of any new regulations on businesses, communities and individuals and be held more accountable for the potential negative impact of the regulations. They noted the amendment does not prevent regulations but simply tries to ensure that they are logical and justified. Amendment opponents said the current law is sufficient and argued the amendment would add more government bureaucracy and costs during this fiscal crisis. They noted it would make it more difficult for the state to crack down on unscrupulous business practices, polluters and other entities that need regulation by the state. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment requiring a regulatory impact statement. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment). Y

STUDY CHARTER SCHOOL MORATORIUM (H 4000)

House 111-43, approved an amendment requiring the Education Committee to study and issue a report by September 30 and the Ways and Means Committee to do the same by October 30 on the issue of charter school funding and the possibility of both a moratorium on the creation of any new charter schools and a freeze on enrollment at the schools at current levels. Amendment supporters said this study is preferable to a more drastic pending amendment that would place an outright three-year moratorium on the creation of these innovative and worthwhile schools. They argued that the report would offer crucial information and allow the House to act on any moratorium proposal in a more responsible and informed manner. Amendment opponents said the study and report would simply delay action on the question of a moratorium and argued it is time for the House to act. They said that a moratorium is the responsible thing to do in light of the state's fiscal crisis and resulting cuts in education and local aid funding. (A "Yea" vote is for the study and report. A "Nay" vote is against the study and report). Y

IMPOSE THREE-YEAR CHARTER SCHOOL MORATORIUM (H 4000)

House 61-93, rejected an amendment placing a three-year moratorium on the creation of any new charter schools and freezing present charter school enrollment at current levels. The amendment also calls for a comprehensive study and report by December 31, 2005 on the funding and academic performance of charter schools. Some amendment supporters said it is irresponsible to allow the creation of more charter schools and require local communities to fund them in light of the state's fiscal crisis. Others said that these experimental schools have questionable performance records and are draining desperately needed funds from regular public schools. Some amendment opponents said a moratorium is a drastic measure and noted they preferred a study without a moratorium. Others noted that these innovative schools have performed so well that there are some 12,000 children on waiting lists for enrollment. (A "Yea" vote is for the three-year moratorium and the enrollment freeze. A "Nay" vote is against the moratorium and freeze). N

INCREASE METCO FUNDING (H 4000)

House 39-114, rejected an amendment increasing funding for METCO by $1.5 million (from $13.6 to $15.1 million) and reducing funding for the Department of Corrections by the same $1.5 million (from $427.5 million to $426 million). Amendment supporters said this would simply fund METCO at last year's level and protect this important program that provides enhanced educational opportunities in better schools for many inner-city students. Amendment opponents said the reduced funding for METCO is necessary in light of the state's fiscal crisis and noted that many programs are taking bigger hits. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment increasing METCO funding and decreasing Department of Corrections funding. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment). N

Budget death notice

TO THE EDITOR:

Every city and town:

PROGRAM, Tobacco Control-Of Massachusetts. Suddenly, July 1, 2003. Age 10, formerly recognized as a national leader in tobacco education, prevention and cessation. While valiantly, trying to reduce the #1, preventable cause of death in Massachusetts today. Unexpectedly, this voter mandated, health program, funded by less than 5 percent of the $739 million tobacco related revenues, is expected to be laid to rest as a result of our state budget, life support, being terminated. Sadly, this loss will affect nearly 14,000 kids in our state who will get hooked on tobacco this year, thousands of addicted smokers who want to quit, and many families who will experience the devastating effects of smoking, cancer, and death. All, which could have been prevented. In lieu of flowers, sincere and heartfelt comments may be forwarded to your state legislator, before this valuable health program, and this notice, are history.

Fisherman say harbor sewer pipe is a big menace to navigation

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Local fishermen say that a sewer pipe in Cohasset Harbor poses a threat to navigation at low tide.

The pipe, which extends from Lawrence Wharf off Border Street, caused problems a few weeks ago for fisherman Billy Oliver of Elm Court.

Sometime around Easter weekend, Oliver's 32-foot fishing boat was hung up on the pipe during an extreme low tide. At the time, Oliver's boat was tied to a mooring owned by Herb Jason of Cushing Road.

Jason, 89, is a lifelong Cohasset resident and a longtime fisherman. "The problem is the pipe never should have been there in the first place," he said. "They're going to have to fix it. That's all there is to it. It's a menace to navigation."

Jason's grandson, John Small, said he estimates the pipe is 18 inches below the surface at a normal low tide. During a spring tide, which was the case when Oliver's boat was hung up on the pipe, it could be a little as 8 to 12 inches from the surface, Small said.

"Obviously it's a hazard to navigation," he said. "That's at the end of the channel and it's a navigable waterway."

Oliver said, at first look, it appears his boat was not damaged. He said his boat was on Jason's mooring last season, but he did not have any trouble with the pipe. Now that he's encountered it, he has heard stories from other boaters who have hit it.

Oliver said it was probably the combination of an extreme low tide and a southeast wind direction that caused his boat to hit the pipe. But he said scenarios like that should have been anticipated when the pipe was installed.

"The problem is the pipe never should have been there in the first place. They're going to have to fix it. That's all there is to it. It's a menace to navigation."
— Herb Jason, Cushing Road

"When you have people dredging a navigable waterway, all these things are supposed to be accounted for. You don't just plan for a normal low tide," he said.

Jason and Small said they plan to approach selectmen about the pipe in the coming weeks. Acting Harbormaster John Muncey said he had heard a few stories about people hitting the pipe but he had not contacted the Sewer Commission or the Town Manager.

Sewer Commissioner Ray Kasperowicz said he was notified two weeks ago by a resident that the pipe was a potential problem. He said he was looking into the issue and did not know if the Sewer Department was required to place the pipe at a certain depth. He could not say with certainty when the pipe was installed.

Small said the pipe needed to be moved and someone should be held accountable for its current placement. "It boils down to it's either the contractor's fault, the engineer's fault or the Sewer Department's fault, or it's all three of them together," he said.

Oliver said the pipe would be a threat to people docking at low tide at Lawrence Wharf and could result in someone being thrown overboard. "It's a disaster waiting to happen," he said. "It's going to be like diving off a diving board into three feet of water."

Students to get firsthand look at police work

First 'academy' to start in July

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cohasset High School students may soon be running toward local police officers rather than in the other direction.

That's because Erik Belz, a junior, has made it a one-man campaign at the high school to get a student police academy started.

It all began when Sgt. William Quigley took part in teacher Jack Buckley's "Street Law" class back in February and the word quickly spread among students that cops can be cool.

Quigley gave a 90-minute presentation on criminal law, search and seizure and what it's like to be a police officer. The police union bought all the students who attended the Street Law class Cohasset Police T-shirts with an embroidered patch on the front.

"There were about 25 students in the class and the presentation ended up being a giant success," Quigley recalled. "We invited the class to the police station about two weeks later for a tour of the building, a look at the cruisers, and the town's 9-1-1 center."

Word quickly spread at the high school and Erik tracked Quigley down via the department's web site about starting a student police academy.

"I was interested in the (street law) class," Erik says. "But I couldn't fit the class in because of my schedule."

Quigley and Erik are working together adapting the syllabus from those used in student police academies in other towns, such as Hingham and Hanson

"I've sat down with Sgt. Quigley to write out an outline, objectives and goals," Erik says.

They've published a CPD Student Police Academy application, which Erik is distributing to interested students at the high school. So far about 10 students have expressed a strong interest. The class will ideally have 15, Quigley said.

The relationship between Cohasset youth and local police officers has at times been strained especially in the summer months after teens were arrested for underage drinking.

The application addresses the issue head on and says the academy will be a two-way educational process. It states "the SPA shall be designed to enhance and promote the relationship between the Cohasset Police Department and young adults, resulting in a better understanding of what teens can expect from the officers who serve them and the services they provide."

"Anything we can do to build a couple of bridges at the high school is important. The student police academy is a good idea and I wholeheartedly support it."
— Police Chief Robert Jackson

The class, which is expected to start this summer after students return from the Appalachia Service Project trip, will include a ride along, CPR certification, motor vehicle law, search and seizure, and more.

"We're going to try and make it interesting and fun," Quigley says.

Quigley will talk to the police union about helping out with the funding needed for the class and hopes to be able to use the library which has more room than the station. There will be no charge for the students and the class is being offered to those age 16 and up.

"All the officers I have asked said they would volunteer their time to teach the students," he says.

Police Chief Robert Jackson is giving the effort high marks.

"Anything we can do to build a couple of bridges at the high school is important," he says. "The student police academy is a good idea and I wholeheartedly support it."

While Erik does not have aspirations to become a police officer, he would like to study law.

"I think law in general is an interesting topic," he says. "Police enforce the law and I think seeing the enforcement side of law is pretty interesting."

Anyone interested in applying for the class should leave a message for Sgt. Quigley at the station, 781-383-1055 or email him at: wquigley@cohassetpolice.com

Boys tennis team clinches postseason berth, girls clinch SSL championship

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

It was a week of major accomplishments for both the girls and boys tennis teams this week, both teams securing their primary pre-season goals. For the males, a spot in the postseason was attained last Saturday, while the girls claimed at least a share of the South Shore League title for the eighth straight year.

The boys team, 8-6, overcame a vast line-up deficiency this year to qualify for the tournament. With merely seven names on the roster, the team was, for the most part, injury-free, until their clinching win over Harwich. Number one Dave Ingber, tied 5-5 in the second set with Ruff Ryder's ace Craig Druschella, collapsed with a pulled ligament in his left hip, knocking him out for the remainder of the season.

Fortunately, the team picked up the slack amazingly well, battling for a 3-2 win over the team that had dusted Cohasset, 4-1 in their first go-around. Freshman Nils Sceery, taking on third singles junior Ash Alcorn, found himself down a set when the injury occurred, but came back for a tremendous upset, 3-6, 6-4, 7-5.

Seniors Ross Lieb-Lappen and Scott Faber, also victims in the first set, took over the net and dominated the remainder of the match to give Cohasset its second point. The win was secured by the win of junior Andrew Wise and Chris Pescatore, who took a two set decision at second doubles.

"That was unquestionably the match of the season," noted second year coach Kent Parrot. "These guys never quit. Harwich is a good, good team, but we have never played as well as we did [Thursday]."

Technically, the dramatic victory over Harwich brought the Skippers' record to 7-3, not actually with enough wins for a tourney berth. However, after an expected loss to league power Norwell, Cohasset received a forfeit from league punching bag Mashpee on Saturday to make things official.

The boys entered their toughest stretch of the season this week, taking on four consecutive teams on four consecutive days, all of whom are playoff bound. Monday brought about a loss to Hanover, now at full strength with the return of Pauri Pandi, ironically one of Parrot's protégés through his work with the ace at the Hanover YMCA.

Still, though the team lost, the match featured another stellar performance by Nils Sceery winning at second singles, with

Down to the wire

CHS lady laxers need at least two wins in final four to earn playoff bid

The CHS lady laxers kept themselves in the thick of the postseason chase with an 8-5 win over Marshfield last Thursday.

Senior captain Maura McKenney paced the offense in Thursday's with with a hat trick, bringing her team best goal total on the season to 28. Junior Nicole Turgiss chipped in with a pair of tallies.

The win returned the Lady Skippers to the magic .500 mark needed for postseason qualification.

As expected, however, the Cohasset girls could not pull off a win to perennial powerhouse Hingham (12-2-1) on Tuesday. Even with a second straight hat trick from Maura McKenney, the Lady Skippers fell, 12-6, to drop a game off the pace to 6-7.

The team must now win at least two of its final three to qualify for a second straight state tourney berth, but that will be no small task with red-hot Scituate, who already bested them in lopsided fashion two weeks back, still on the slate for May 27, along with Bourne on the road (today) and Nantucket at home (May 28) in non-league play.

CHS softball team shows signs of improvement down stretch

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

Tuesday was one time it would have been a good time for the Cohasset High softball team to play just five innings.

The Skippers have played a boatload of five inning games this season, because the "Slaughter Rule" is usually invoked to bring an end to a lopsided score, usually against Cohasset.

After five innings of play Tuesday, Cohasset was enjoying a 4-3 lead over Rockland, in what was becoming one of the better Cohasset games this season.

Rockland's next turn at bat then turned into an avalanche of runs, the Bulldogs scoring 10 runs, going on to a 16-4 win.

The loss left Cohasset with a 4-13 record and one game to go. The Skippers will go against Rockland Thursday.

Prior to the loss against Rockland, the Skippers dropped a 20-0 decision to Sacred Heart on Monday, lost a 14-1 decision to Abington on Friday, and, prior to that game, Cohasset did some "Slaughter Rule" invoking of its own on May 13 with a 33-1 bombing of South Shore Christian Academy.

One of the outstanding performances of the game for Cohasset was the play of freshman pitcher Katey James, who fired a no-hitter, fanning 12 in five innings of play.

That win had to be Cohasset's best effort of the season. The Skippers were led by Danielle Pinkus, who hit a grand slam home run and drove in a total of eight runs.

According to coach Deb Boswick, the grand slam by Pinkus was out of the park, marking the first time a slam was hit out of Barnes Field.

Another fine performance by Cohasset teams took place on May 6, when Cohasset dropped a close one to Hull, 4-3. Earlier in the season, Hull defeated Cohasset, 17-0.

In the close game against Hull, Cohasset was enjoying a 1-0 advantage until Hull scored two to take over the lead. Cohasset tied it up and it remained that way until the seventh when Hull unloaded for three straight triples and the win.

"It's been a learning experience," noted coach Bostwick "We have had some good moments and some bad ones. For the most part, our team has shown a great deal of improvement, especially the performance over Hull. We also had a nice sowing against Rockland Tuesday. We just ran out of gas.

"Things are getting better. Our biggest challenge is to get our team to play seven innings. This allows more players to get some experience. Unfortunately, the slaughter rule has stopped a lot of our games after five innings of play."

The win by Abington last Friday enabled the Green Wave to win its fourth South Shore League title in five years. The win left Abington with a 15-1 overall record and an 11-0 league record.

Too little, too late

Cohasset baseball team falls short of postseason bid

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

In the end, it was the lack of consistency that did in the Cohasset High baseball team in its quest to qualify for the postseason for the first time in many years.

Last Thursday's 8-0 loss to South Shore League leading Harwich was a microcosm of this late season stretch that has seen the Skippers lose six of its last seven games to fall to 5-10 on the season, thus wiping out all chances of a .500 season and the postseason berth that goes along with it.

The pitching was relatively strong, but the defense let down the cause big time. The Skippers committed six errors in the game, which contributed to most of the visiting Rough Ryders runs. It also only slightly increased their per game average of approximately four per game on the season.

"We have just not been playing good defense the last few games, and that's very frustrating," said Cohasset coach Al Gallotta. "You hope to see your team playing its best down the stretch, but that has just not been the case with us."

The bats , which carried the team to a large extent through the early part of the season,

Laxmen expecting top seed

Skippers push best ever win streak to 14 as Kahn pushes career point total to 211

Last Thursday, senior attackman Curt Kahn broke up a Sandwich clear with 10 seconds left in a tie game, and passed the ball to Jake Previte for an open-net game winner at the buzzer, then came back four days later to score six in a 12-5 win over non-league opponent Hopkinton.

With 10 goals and two assists in the two games, Kahn pushed his career point total to 211 and Cohasset went to 14-1 on the season, and finished 9-1 in Pilgrim League play, good for second place behind undefeated and nationally ranked Duxbury. The 14-game win streak is a school record, and Cohasset had a chance to extend it on Wednesday night when the Skippers were scheduled to play their final regular season game against another non-league opponent, Canton.

The state tournament seeding and draw was scheduled to be done today (Thursday), and all indicators point towards Cohasset receiving the top seed for Division Three. Laxpower.com, the national lacrosse web site, currently has the Skippers eighth in the state among all public schools, regardless of size. No D3 school is ahead of them in that ranking.

YOUTH LACROSSE REPORT

Lax, the Way It Is Supposed to Be

Finally after a VERY long season of rainouts, flooded fields, frozen tundra, and cabin fever filled players and fans, we got the day we were all hoping for with gorgeous weather and all the Cohasset Youth Lax teams playing at home against perennial rivals Hingham and Scituate. It just doesn't get any better than this.

Here's the action from this weekend and remember, the Cohasset Lacrosse Youth Night will be held at the first High School playoff game, so wear your jersey to the game and get free pizza and soda while you cheer on our "older" boys to victory.

U15 White Plays a Doubleheader

The older kids went on the road Saturday to play one of the state's lacrosse powerhouses, Sudbury, while also participating in their home game on Sunday against Hingham. Victory was ours in both contests and the team responded very favorably to the warm weather and the chance to show their stuff against two strong programs.

The Sudbury game was a "Dominant Moment" right from the start as Cohasset took the first face-off and really never looked back as their defense and offensive prowess were unstoppable on the way to a lopsided 10 - 2 win.

Mark Flibotte opened the scoring on a scripted back door feed from attack-mate Mike Grimm and then showed that he could also "pass the rock" with a no look transfer to Chris Mills who found the back of the cage from the right side. Mills was again in the right place at the right time as he finished off a super 3 pass play by taking a feed from Grimm (after a great possession steal by Mike Bunstein) and "deeking out" the goalie on a high/low move for his 2nd of the day. Bunstein scored as he snuck through several defenders for his bank deposit". As the first half was winding down, the scoring continued on 2 goals by Dan Trendowicz (also with two assists for the day) - one assisted by Bunstein and the other from Grimm - on a strong midfield give and go through traffic. As the game was in control early, the kids got a chance to play some new positions and still managed to add to the their lead as Grimm finished with a goal and 3 assists, Bunstein notched his 2nd (to go with his two assists) and Matt Burgess got a solo tally on a nice loose ball follow up. The highlight of the afternoon was probably the last goal coming on a combination of defenseman where Jeff Brown and Pat Flynn (playing middie) snuck through the defense and worked a sweet pass and dodge to give Brown the score to wind up the action. Tall in the goal again was Nathan Porter with 15 saves on a superb performance that is becoming more the norm for this talented newcomer to the cage. Keeping Sudbury's offense in check were Chris Kuppens, Justin Connors, and Conor Holway who played a full game on D shutting down almost every advance.

Sunday proved to be more of the same against a talented, but overmatched, Hingham group. Fresh from a solid win the day before, Cohasset White were primed and ready to carry their momentum into this next game that kicked off a great afternoon of lacrosse. The offensive combination of Mike Bunstein and Dan Trendowicz was the story of the day as they combined for 4 of the first 6 Cohasset scores as the Hingham squad seemed to be moving in slow motion every time they approached the net. Trendowicz finished with 4 goals while Bunstein had 5 assists on the day in a game that was never really close as we had them up 6 - 2 by the end of the first half. Again, giving the kids a positional rotation that saw some new kids step up in the likes of Greg Gallagher clearing end to end to assist on a Mark Flibotte and Matt Burgess combination. Nathan Porter was solid in the goal notching 13 saves backed again by the defense of Brown, Flynn, Holway, and Kuppens. The Hingham group did mount a comeback to get it within 3 entering the 4th quarter, but this was to no avail as the win was sealed by 3 consecutive "photo-op" college level one-timers (quicksticks) by Chris Mills, Mark Flibotte, and Ramsey Davis - the last two both assisted by defense/middie Jeff Brown. When the dust settled, Chris Davis continued to control possessions on face-offs which made it next to impossible to get anything going for Hingham and the boys had a home win of 10 - 5.

U15 Blue v Scituate and Quincy

The U15 Blue team also got in two games this past week notching one win and only their first loss in the action. Playing a Thursday night game at Quincy and with a very thin squad comprised of White and Blue team members the Cohasset squad lost a tough battle 7-6. The game was back and forth all night with Cohasset holding a 6-5 lead heading into the fourth quarter before giving up a fluke goal that hit one of the Cohasset defenders and bounced in the goal to tie the game. Quincy scored again to take the final lead before Cohasset had a strong finish trying to tie the game.

On Sunday the U15 Blue squad was back in business with a full complement of players and dominated a good Scituate team 11-6. Ryan Kucinski returned from an injury and scored the first goal of the game on a great hustle play by picking up a loose ball in front of the cage and dunking it home. Jared Kinch was outstanding all day on ground balls and showed an unselfish leadership by notching four assists with great passes to his teammates. Corey Chase led the goal scorers with four, Alex Shipp and Austen Lanzilloti each had two, and Adam Smith and Teddy Galligan notched single tallies.

Smith and Peter Oswald both picked up an assist as well. Wes Ulmer continued his excellent play in the cage with eight saves and Matt Harriman, Jared Dick, Robert Sylvia, and Jake Cuneo provided good support on defense.

U13 White v. Scituate

The Cohasset U13 White team returned to action this past Sunday at Milliken versus a strong Scituate team. The home team came ready to play on this beautiful afternoon and displayed a strong competitive desire. Both squads had fine offensive and defensive play in the opening quarter, with the difference being hot goaltending by the Scituate keeper. Scituate led 3-0 after one. The second quarter was full of more back and forth action with Scituate notching the only tally, taking a 4-0 lead into halftime. Cohasset got back into the game in the third quarter as it netted three scores.

Gordon Smith got Cohasset on the board on a nice feed from Tom Buckley. Ian Porter scored on a nice roll-up move on a feed from Jonny Wade, and Jonny Wade added the third score unassisted. Unfortunately for Cohasset, Scituate added three scores of their own and the third quarter ended with Scituate up 7-3. The forth quarter was all Scituate as the visitors wore down the Cohasset defense and added five more scores. Jonny Wade scored his second of the game to close out the scoring. The Cohasset goaltending of Ian Quinlan and Chris Brown helped keep the game competitive with both keepers having a number of fine saves. The final score was 12-4 in favor of the visitors.

U13 Blue v Hingham

The home team was victorious in an action packed game against Hingham on Sunday, winning 9-7. We played hard in the first half, drawing the score back to all-even no fewer than three times against a well skilled Hingham team. Although Hingham took a 4-3 lead into the halftime break, that was the last they saw of it. Cohasset was all hustle and passed the ball proficiently throughout, controlling the game in the second half.

Eight Cohasset players accounted for our nine goals. Dean Driscoll netted three goals at Midi. Logan Chase and Ian Lyster each had one goal and one assist. Andrew Smith posted another goal. Olly Forrer netted one at Midi too. On attack, Will Wise had one and Max Shipp scored one and assisted one. David Toomey, who played all over, had two assists. Ian Porter showed up big time taking the net for us in the first half before handing off to Jack Murphy for the second. This game epitomized what lacrosse is all about. The coaches would like to take this opportunity to say how proud we are of everyone on the team. What a great game - terrific job everyone!

White U11 v Scituate

The Cohasset White 10u team lost a hard fought game to Scituate Sunday 7-5. Pat Kearney started the scoring for Cohasset with a strong move to the goal and Sam Richardson got his first of 2 goals for a 2-1 lead after the first period. Terrance Durkin assisted on the second Richardson goal. Derek Froio made a great shot from a tough angle to end the first half with Cohasset up by 4-3. The 3rd period saw both teams have good scoring chances but both ended up with 1 goal, the Cohaaset goal by Thomas Flibotte to end the 3rd period with the score 5-4. Scituate had a strong 4th quarter and sored 2 goals in the last 5 minutes to take away the win. Willie Brown was outstanding in goal playing the whole game and saving 10 shots, some from close range. Defensive efforts from Dan Barnes, Mitch Mcnary, and Brendan Walsh from the middie position was noted on the first hot game day of the year.

U11 Blue v Hingham

Cohasset worked tough to scratch out a strong victory over Hingham 6 - 3 with scoring Chris Murphy (A) assist by Derek Youngman (M), Chris Murphy assist by Morgan Grasz, then Derek Youngman (M) assist by Chase Murphy (M), Chris Murphy unassisted, Brendan Horigan, two more goals, each unassisted. Goaltenders Horigan had 3 saves and Chris Wilson 1 Save.

Both goaltenders were aggressive in the cage, with one of Chris Wilson's saves coming when he came out of the cage and "stuffed" an attacker. After an unsteady first half, Cohasset Blue's defense clicked and shut out Hingham for the third quarter and only allowed one goal in the fourth quarter.

Cohasset Blue's offense was dominant in the third and fourth quarters, keeping the ball in the Hingham defensive zone most of the time. Cohasset's middies became comfortable passing the ball downfield to the waiting attack line. Hingham had far fewer shots on goal in the second half.

Cohasset took most of the face offs and was even with Hingham on picking up ground balls. Alex Evans and Robbie Mahoney also had strong supporting roles in the win.

U11 Gray v Braintree

Gray Team played a tough game on Thursday night, the tempture was a little cool but the action was pretty hot. Cohasset Gray played a very quick and physical Braintree team and it took the first two quarters for our team to adjust to that type of play. Even though Braintree was assessed many roughing penalties in the first half, Cohasset still trailed 4-0. Brennan Bukowski hung tough in goal during that half and had 4 saves.

In the second half our team rallied and played up to the Braintree squad achieving an even half in scoring 2-2. Both Cohasset goals were scored by great individual efforts by Luke Ernst and Mitch McNary. Both teams presurred each others goalies durimg that half and Cohasset's Kyle Healy pushed away 7 saves. Braintree prevailed 6-2, but Cohasset Gray played extremely well in the final period of play with many chances and strong pressure in the Braintree end. A combined midline and attack squad of Drew Cobin, MItch McNary, Pat MacCormick, Danny Czerkawski, Chase Baldwin and Chris Brash led the efforts down the stretch.

Flibotte named MBYLL All-Star

Gabriella Flibotte is the first Cohasset girl's lacrosse player ever selected to play on the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League 12-and-Under All Star team, which will compete at the National Junior Lacrosse Festival in Binghamton, N.Y. in late June.

Flibotte currently holds a unique distinction in the eight-year annals of Cohasset Youth Lacrosse. Not only is she leading her 12-and-Under team in scoring, but she has been "playing up" with one of Chasset's 14-and-Under squads and currently leads that team in scoring too.

Through four games with the Cohasset White 12-and-Under team, Flibotte — a sixth-grader at Deer Hill School — has scored 23 goals and added one assist. In the same number of games with the White 14-and-Under squad — generally comprised of 7th and 8th graders — Flibotte has 12 goals. In two of her four 12-U games, Flibotte outscored the opposing team by herself.

Last year, Flibotte was the leading scorer for Cohasset's 12-and-Under team with 26 goals and 1 assist on the season.

"I feel certain that Gabby will be as dominant a player at the All-Star level as she is for Cohasset," said her coach, Chuck Jaffe. "She makes everyone around her better, and I'm pretty certain this will not be the last time she makes an all-star or all-league team during her career."

Youth laxwomen keep rolling; win four versus Norwell

The Cohasset Girls Youth Lacrosse teams still haven't lost a home game at Deer Hill School this year, as the four girls teams had runaway wins over teams from Norwell on May 18. The wins extended a remarkable Cohasset record; no girls team has lost while playing at Deer Hill in the two seasons of the girls program; there have been two ties.

12-and-Under

The Cohasset White 12-U team opened the day in dominant fashion against Norwell Blue, jumping out to a 5-0 lead on the strength of a hat trick from Gabriella Flibotte and single scores from Katie Gaumer and Caitlin Mahoney. Norwell scored late to make it a 5-1 game at the half.

Cohasset controlled play in the second half, with Polly Murray and Sophie Bertolami each scoring their first goal of the season, sandwiched around Mahoney's second score, as the home team rolled to an 8-2 win.

Amanda Masotta, Megan Richardson, Mimi Mahoney and Liz Tetrault led a defensive effort that allowed just six shots on goal for the entire game. Thomson Jaffe and Abby Faulkner split halves in net, each recording two saves while allowing one goal.

Cohasset's 12-U Blue team played Norwell White later in the day to equally strong results. Lauren Blaze, Sarah Libby and Natalie Hunt led a defensive effort that did not allow a shot on goal for the entire first half. Meanwhile, Paige Smith netted her first goal of the year, Lindsay Hill scored a hat trick, Maura Barnes had two goals and an assist, Amy Meikleham and Katelyn Ryan scored solo goals as Cohasset ran its lead to 8-0 at the half.

Cohasset spent much of the second half experimenting with players at different positions. Jennifer Cahill, Leigh Collins, Dominique Rioux and Thomson Jaffe all had their best scoring opportunities of the season, only to be turned away by Norwell's goalie or close defense. Maura Barnes closed out her hat trick for the only score, as Cohasset cruised to a 9-3 win.

Abby Faulkner — who recorded an assist while playing midfield in the first half — saved two shots in the goal during the second half of the game.

14-and-Under

The Cohasset White 14-U squad jumped out to a 2-0 lead on the strength of two goals from Lindsay Durkin and never looked back against Norwell Blue. Playing with a short bench and few subs, the team played a controlled, efficient game, stretching the lead to 4-0 at the half behind scores from Gabriella Flibotte and Kaleigh Swain.

Those two did all the team's second-half scoring too, with Swain completing a hat trick, around Flibotte's second score of the day. Two late Norwell goals brought the final score to 7-2, but Tessa Leahy made two saves in the net during the second half to make sure it got no closer. Haley Haracz, the first-half goalie, made one save. The win raised White's record to 5-0 on the season.

Cohasset's Blue squad — which borrowed several players from the White team and the Blue 12- U squad — had an even easier time with Norwell White. Amy Meikleham — playing in her third game of the day — opened the scoring less than a minute into the contest and Maura Barnes recorded the first of her two assists with a feed that Kristen Dooley converted into a 2-0 lead. Elizabeth Landon answered a Norwell score with her first goal of the season and — after another Dooley goal — her twin sister Charlotte got into the act just before halftime by finishing a Kara Wilcox feed. Haley Haracz made two stops in the net during the first half.

Mary Previte scored to start the second half — the direct result of a hustling-sprawling-falling pass from Roxanne Tehranian — before Dooley finished her hat trick by netting a Charlotte Landon set-up. Wilcox scored the next two goals before Paige Strecker answered a Norwell goal with her first score of the season to close out the action with the score 10-2.

Alyssa Campbell stopped one of the two shots Norwell was able to get on net during the second half. Colleen Richardson, Tessa Leahy and Rebecca Evans — all stalwarts on defense through both games — and Maura Regan never let Norwell muster an offense.

Despite the disappointing stretch run, year one of the Al Gallotta (pictured) era can be declared nothing but a success considering recent CHS baseball history. The entire program was energized by the enthusiasm brought to the plate by Gallotta and new junior varsity coach Damien D'Angelo.

have also been silenced of late by some quality pitching. On Thursday, only senior Chris McKenna was able to reach Harwich's fireballer for hits, doing so with a single and a frozen rope triple late in the game.

Junior John Downing pitched into the fifth inning for the Skippers, and senior Mike Snowdale came in for mop up duty.

The Skippers followed this game with two more home losses to SSL rivals, falling to Mashpee on Saturday, 7-3, and Abington on Monday, 11-1, to officially fall out of playoff contention.

Abington senior Paul Chartier threw a complete game three-hitter and struck out 11 Cohasset hitters to improve his team's record to 12-5.

McKenna again provided a few of the scarce Skipper highlights, scoring the team's lone run after he'd reached with a base hit.

Despite the disappointing stretch run, year one of the Al Gallotta era can be declared nothing but a success considering recent CHS baseball history. The entire program was energized by the enthusiasm brought to the plate by Gallotta, who coached baseball for 27 years at Archbishop Williams (while serving concurrently as that school's Athletic Director for 25 of those years), and new junior varsity coach Damien D'Angelo.

Numbers were way up this spring, particularly at the underclass level, where lacrosse converts had been on a steady rise in recent years.

The Cohasset nine were scheduled to host Norwell yesterday in their final SSL tilt, and then close out the season with a couple of non-league games on the road, playing at Holbrook today (3:30 p.m. start) and Millis tomorrow (4 p.m.).

among the best in our division," said Cohasset coach Kevin Orcutt, "and our hard work this season would justify the tournament committee giving us serious consideration for the top spot. We're a blue-collar team with great senior leadership, and our players have earned every accolade they've received."

Against Hopkinton, a D3 team the Skippers could possibly face again in the tournament, Cohasset took an early 4-0 lead behind goals by Tom Anderson, Kahn (two) and Jake Previte. But the Hillers shook off the effects of a long bus ride, and made a second-quarter run, closing the gap to two before midfielder John Durkin drove a hard bounce shot into the upper corner with six seconds left in the half to make the score 7-4.

Steady play from goalie Nick Murphy (13 saves, nine in the second half) and defenders Ben Lynner, Nick Spirito, Evan Pestone, Conor Buick and Steve Davis shut down the Hopkinton offense, holding the visitors to a single goal. Meanwhile, Kahn, Durkin and his cousin Joe Durkin stretched the lead to the final five-goal margin.

Kahn finished as the high scorer of the game with six goals, while John Durkin had two, Previte a goal and an assist, Robert Hickey two assists, and Joe Durkin and Anderson one goal each.

"This was a strange game," said coach Orcutt. "We seemed kind of flat, and had a lot of trouble maintaining our concentration. That showed up as missed ground balls, poor possessions and bad decisions like re-entering the defensive box after we'd taken it out. Hopkinton, to its credit, played us very well. But the bottom line is that we need to get better for the tournament."

Cohasset 11, Sandwich 10

With just seconds left on the clock, Curt Kahn broke up a Sandwich clear, picked up the loose ball and passed to a streaking Jake Previte for the winning score as time expired in a thrilling 11-10 victory over Pilgrim rival Sandwich at Alumni Field on Thursday.

The Skippers victory began on a high note, as Kahn picked up his 200th career point when his first goal of the game gave Cohasset a 2-1 first-quarter lead. The Skippers extended their lead to 7-3 at the half, and 9-4 at the end of three quarters before Sandwich went on a 5-1 final period run to tie the game with less than two minutes left.

A botched clear gave Sandwich a golden opportunity to take the lead, as the Knights got a four-on-two fast break. But goalie Nick Murphy came up with a huge save, and the Skippers regained possession. Sandwich's defenders stopped Cohasset's attack, but as the Knight goalie tried a clearing pass, Kahn knocked it down and outbattled the keeper for the ground ball. He then saw Previte free in front of the open net, and managed to get the ball to him just before time expired.

"I'm pleased with the win," said coach Kevin Orcutt, "but frustrated that we allowed this team to come back against us in the fourth quarter. Still, to finish the Pilgrim schedule with just one loss is a significant accomplishment."

"Curt's scoring achievements are great, too," said Orcutt, "but this season isn't about individual accomplishments. We have team goals, and so far we're achieving them. That's what's really exciting about this spring."

Cohasset's scorers included Kahn (four goals, two assists), Previte (three goals, one assist), John Durkin, Tom Anderson, Robert Hickey (one goal, one assist each), and Dewayne Morris (one goal).

Murphy had 14 saves.

Due to a problem with e-mail, the following report was left out of last week's Mariner.

Skippers 16, Hanover 6

The Indians came into the contest at 2-12, and without a victory in Pilgrim play. But, for a half, the visitors gave Cohasset a struggle, going into the locker room at 5-5. In fact, Hanover took the lead two minutes into the third period. Then the Skippers caught fire, throwing in 11 consecutive goals en route to a 16-6 rout.

Kahn and Jake Previte each had five goals and an assist to lead the Skippers to their eighth league win and twelfth overall in a row.

Other Skipper scorers against Hanover included Tom Anderson with a hat trick, Mike Rasmussen with two goals, and junior midfielder Dewayne Morris with his second of the season. Robert Hickey had two assists, and dominated on faceoffs, assisted by longstick middie Nick Spirito.

Nick Murphy allowed all six goals and had seven saves in three-and-a-half quarters, before being relieved by Chris Simms, who picked up a pair of saves.

Cohasset 14, Milton 9

The Cohasset boys varsity ran their record-setting win streak to 11 on Monday night, as they beat non-league opponent Milton 14-9 at the Wildcats' artificial turf field under the lights.

"This was a great effort," said coach Orcutt, "against a team that has a tradition of toughness and excellence. We got great play at the defensive end, once we made an adjustment to our man-down play, and we rode their clears better than we had all season."

The Skippers took an early lead on goals by soph Sam Steele and senior Curt Kahn, then outscored the Wildcats 6-3 in the second quarter to take command. Kahn led the onslaught with three consecutive goals— two of which were unassisted lasers into the upper corner of the net— and would finish with four on the night.

Soph Jake Previte had another big night, with four goals and four assists, while Tom Anderson and John Durkin each had a pair of goals. Robert Hickey and Sam Steele each scored a single tally, and Hickey, Mike Rasmussen (three assists), Joe Durkin and Ben Lynner picked up assists.

Lynner was a force at defense and on faceoffs all night, while goalie Nick Murphy had 15 saves.

junior Tim Anton valiantly filling in at the top spot. Also, Lieb-Lappen and Faber lost at first doubles in a 7-5, third set decision against the only doubles team that had topped Norwell's all-scholastic pair this season.

On Tuesday, the team was downed by Hingham, a team that features state champ Brian Marsden and some of the best doubles teams around.

Today, the Skippers take on league rivals Abington, the team that downed Cohasset 4-1 earlier this year. Although the team will likely be down a man for the match, no SSL team besides Norwell has beaten Cohasset twice in a season during CHS's three-year run to the postseason.

Girls report

On the girls side, the Lady Skippers ran their record to 14-0, tossing aside Norwell despite losing number one sophomore Elizabeth Stone to an ankle injury. Luckily, the injury is just a sprain, and the team will likely have her back before the tournament starts after Memorial Day.

The girls will look to top Norwell for the third consecutive time today at home (3:30 p.m. start) and clinch sole possession of the South Shore League crown.

In Monday's 3-2 win for the Lady Skippers over Norwell, the victories were delivered by the bottom three spots in the lineup.

At third singles, Holly Graham needed just one game over the minimum to dust off her counterpart, Kate Mulvaney, 6-0, 6-1.

Cohasset's second doubles team of Corey Evans and Emilie Sullivan made similarly short work of Norwell's Anna Pelton and Kathryn Ankner, 6-1, 6-2.

The first doubles team of Courtney Caron and Julie Shea received a wakeup call from the top Norwell pair of Jenna Wright and Taylor Cleaves in the form of a 4-6 loss, then battled back for wins of 6-2 and 6-3 to claim the deciding point for the win.

The two Norwell wins were delivered in straight sets by top singles players Angie Bizzozero and Meghan Kelley over Cohasset's Grossman sisters, senior Lindsay and freshman Chelsea.

The elder Grossman, who moved up from second to first singles in place of Stone, could not over come the power hitting of Bizzozero.

"Angie was really up for this match today whether it was Liz or Lindsey she was going against," noted Norwell coach Derek Sulc. "She knew how much a win from her might mean in this match, and she brought everything she had to the table."

Chelsea Grossman, making the jump from second doubles to second singles to fill in for her sister, took a bullet for the team, so to speak, going up against red hot Norwell senior captain Meg Kelley, falling 6-1, 6-3.

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

Reasoning behind switch to wood bats packs little pop

Crack versus ping, knee-jerk reaction versus common sense, deflated offensive stats versus considerable cash savings, conjecture on greater injury likelihood versus a definite hardship for college scholarship hopefuls…this wood versus aluminum bats debate is in my mind, as most of you have probably already discerned, no debate at all.

Now, in most debates driven by safety issues I like to think I'd err on the side of caution, particularly where kids are concerned, all other things being relatively equal. In point of fact, though, I've held off on commentary on this matter for months now, challenging my intellect during that time to come up with a compelling defense of the MIAA's decision last fall to outlaw aluminum bats for the state tourney, but I can't do it. In my mind, all other things aren't relatively equal here.

Of course, we all know the ball comes off of the aluminum bat slightly faster. They are lighter than their wood counterparts, making it possible to generate greater bat speed, and the alloys that are used are harder than wood.

High schools are currently allowed to use aluminum bats with nothing less than a minus-three grading, meaning the bats can weigh no less than three ounces under the corresponding bat length in inches. In wood bats, of course, ounces and inches must match.

Testing has revealed that a ball can come off a "minus-3" bat up to six miles per hour faster than its wood counterpart. With many well hit balls at the high school level coming off at over 90 miles-per-hour, is a six miles- per-hour ceiling really all that big a deal?

Some folks say it is, including five of the nine voting members of the MIAA task force appointed to rule on the matter. By this one vote margin, this committee voted to outlaw aluminum bats for this year's state tourney.

Many other individuals close to the scene, however, would say it is not that big a deal, including nearly 75 percent of the Mass. Baseball Coaches Association, who, as a body, are fighting the MIAA decision.

The hard push to return to wood began after a Wellesley pitcher was hit in the face with a comebacker two seasons ago. Would a few miles per hour have made the difference? Maybe. Maybe not.

"No one wants to see kids hurt, but we really haven't seen any evidence that aluminum bats cause more injury," asserted Scituate High coach Kevin Greer.

In fact, Greer and many of his fellow coaches are arguing that the switch to wood bats could result in more injuries, as pitchers going against batters with lumber in their hands are more likely to pitch inside, to saw them off, as there is far less pop off the bottom half of a wood bat than its aluminum counterpart.

Now, while the risk of greater injury remains open to debate, we all know that six miles per hour off the bat gives hitters a notable advantage. Over the course of the high school season, this advantage might translate to four or five more hits. Of course, the difference between five more hits over 20 games—with, say, an average of three at bats a game—would be the difference between a .250 and .300 batting average, and that could make all the difference in the world to some college scouts.

Massachusetts is one of only a handful of states in the U.S. that has switched to wood for high school competition, and the feeling of many coaches is that this is putting their athletes at a distinct disadvantage in he scholarships race.

Then there is the cost factor. Now, in the face of injury prevention, this would be a distant secondary concern. Given the ongoing debate on that matter, however, it remains eminently fair game.

Many high school baseball coaches used to get one or two new aluminum bats per season at a cost of $300-$400 each. Many high school teams are currently on a pace to got through upwards of 30 wood bats this season at an average cost of $35-$50 per.

What do you think are the odds of Financial Committees and town meeting bodies approving more money to buy bats?

We're in a recession here, folks. Athletic budgets are easy targets. Subsequently, user fees are spiraling out of control, doubling and redoubling in many of our towns in the last half decade alone. Cost is already the difference between some high schoolers going out for a team or simply hanging around after school. Do we really want to increase those ranks even more?

And if we outlaw aluminum bats, what's next? Do we start using T-ball balls? Do we make it illegal for high school players to lift weights during the baseball season? After all, if they get stronger, they will be able to swing the bat harder and faster.

Over-55 softball league opens play

It's "Batter Up" for the opening of the fourth season of the South Shore Senior Softball League on Sunday, April 27 at 10 a.m. at Central Park Field in Scituate.

Jim Hyde, founder and manager of the Senior Softball League is optimistic that the sun will shine, the field will be dry and many regular participants will show up ready to play. This very popular league, sponsored by the Scituate Council on Aging, is open to all those 55 and over.

Jim plans to field four teams and use two Scituate field each Sunday (including Central and the baseball diamond at the rear of the Gates Intermediate School) and one field on Wednesday to ensure all players take the field. Jim asks that all interested players meet at the Central Park playing field (on Branch Street, in front of Central Park Housing) on the 27th. There will be an obligatory registration including rules review, release signing and payment of a $30 fee. Teams will then be divided and play will start at the Gates as well as at the new Central Park Field. Come prepared and ready to play!

Boating safety course

The United States Coast Guard Auxiliary and the Cohasset Recreation Department will sponsor a two-session Safe Boating Course, offering certification by both the Coast Guard and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The course will be offered to both youth and adults; however, certification in this course is mandatory for 16-year-olds and under, who wish to operate any horsepower craft. This course is an initial requirement for the process of obtaining a Launch Operators License. U.S.C.G.A. instructors will teach the two-session course, which will be held two consecutive Saturdays, May 31, and June 7, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Ripley Road, Cohasset.

To register, call the Cohasset Recreation Department Office at 781-383-4109 as soon as possible as class will be limited in size and participants will be enrolled on first-call basis. There will be a $35 per person fee for this program, which covers the cost of text book and class materials.

While the class is designed for children/youth and adults, it is suggested that children age 12 and under be accompanied by a participating adult. A segment of the class will be devoted to the new laws regulating personal water craft.

State certification cards will be issued and most insurance companies will offer insurance rate discounts to those completing this course.

French students return enriched from their trip

By Matthew J. Gill
MGILL@CNC.COM

In Paris, students visited mammoths of French architecture and history: the Eiffel Tower, The Louvre, and (pictured) Notre Dame

Last fall, students from a small town in France paid a visit to Scituate and had the opportunity to examine first hand, some interesting aspects of American culture. After classes and sightseeing trips to visit historic sections of Boston, they took in an American football game. Besides trying to understand touchdowns, first downs, and fumbles, the French nationals noticed another peculiarity of this brand of futbol that has yet to make the transition to France: cheerleaders.

Last month, despite concern about possible backlash in Europe as war was raging in Iraq, Scituate and Cohasset students completed their half of the cultural exchange, by traveling to France and staying with the friends they had made last autumn.

The journey was led by SHS Foreign Language Department chairman, Patricia Jacquart, who has been bringing students to the European nation for 20 years. The group visited Paris and the town of Rouen from April 11-26. In Rouen, a city two hours northwest of Paris in the province of Normandy, students stayed with the families of the exchange students that came to the South Shore last fall.

Niki Hall, a Scituate High School senior, has been studying what Hemingway described as "the language of diplomacy," for six years, and she was glad to make the Atlantic-crossing journey to practice her French skills. Before departing, however, one of Niki's friends decided not to go on the trip because of the travel concerns.

Niki said her exchange partner Celine Lamaille, spoke English very well, but her family did not. That wasn't a problem though because Niki found she could communicate with them in their own language.

Like her French counterparts last fall, Niki noted the small French houses. Eating dinner with her host family, she tasted some interesting new foods like pate and scallops, camembert and pain chocolat — a delicious chocolate-filled croissant.

One excursion brought the students to the D-Day beaches of Normandy, where allied forces landed to begin the liberation of France on June 6, 1944; another trip brought them to the Peace Museum in Caen. In Paris, she got to see the Arc de Triumph, and The Louvre, and perhaps the hi-light of the trip was a sunset dinner with a beautiful view, inside the Eiffel Tower.

"It was a great experience to be able to stay with a French family, and I feel that through this I better understand their culture," said SHS student Annie Murphy.

Jacquart said that's what the exchange program is all about, and commented that many of the students who traveled to France plan to stay in touch with their French friends.

In addition to regular classes, there is a noon-time show and a free-choice period with new offerings each day. The "Weathervane" newspaper is produced daily. This summer's musical production is the popular "The Music Man." On Friday, Aug. 1, Summer Arts culminates in an Arts Festival featuring performances of theatre, dance, music, gymnastics, and exhibits of clay, painting, furniture, mosaics, puppets, jewelry and photography. Animated films and videos are also shown.

The goal of Summer Arts is to offer a very high quality arts experience to children, ages eight to 15 with an atmosphere that is exciting and bursting with creativity. The children are from diverse racial, cultural and economic backgrounds — 20 Massachusetts communities are represented. One of the main goals is to create a spirit of cooperation and respect, where the students feel supported and free to express themselves.

The program is staffed by professional artist-teachers and together with the students, they create a special summer of artistic achievement, acceptance and exuberant energy.

Parent forum on grade realignment

Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey and the School Committee will conduct an open forum to discuss the third grade move to the Deer Hill and the sixth grade move to the Middle School on Thursday May 22 at 7 p.m. in the Deer Hill Cafeteria. Parents and interested citizens are invited to attend.

Seaside Adventures

Seaside Adventures, a new program, will be offered at the Center for Student Coastal Research, starting July 1, and runs for three 2-week sessions through August 7. The program's motto, "inspire excitement" reflects the program's purpose of educating current fourth-through-sixth graders on the topics of oceanography, geology, beach composition, and local habitat preservation and appreciation. All sessions, available in the morning or afternoon, incorporate hands-on learning and may involve excursions to such places as Cohasset Harbor, Sandy Beach and Lily Pond. Each session will meet Tuesday through Thursday, 2-1/2 hours daily, for 2 weeks.

The three sessions each focus on a different theme. In the first session, "Beachcombers," young geologists will explore local beach compositions and tides, and will participate in interesting activities along the shoreline. Session II, "Under the Sea," includes building and examining aquariums, and exploring ocean dwellers ranging from creepy crawlers to fascinating fish. The third session of the summer, titled "Explorers," involves exciting activities caring for the special critters that dwell in our ocean and fresh water ponds.

For more information on the Center for Student Coastal Research's Seaside Adventures please visit its web site, www.ccscr.org, or call our office at (781)-383-8909. Applications are available online, at the Paul Pratt Library, or at the Recreation Department.

New home at Pratt building shaping up

Historical Society starting to settle in

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The Historical Society is slowly but surely settling in to its new home at the old Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Two weeks ago, the society hosted a workshop in the new headquarters that focused on textile storage and display.

The workshop allowed society members to break out a few of their antique gowns for demonstrations. A 5-hour seminar was led by Dr. Margaret Ordonez, a textile conservator from the University of Rhode Island, who instructed participants in how store and exhibit historic costumes.

About 20 people attended the workshop, some from as far away as Portsmouth, N.H. The workshop was co-sponsored by the Hull Lifesaving Museum and was partially funded by the Cohasset Arts Lottery Council.

The knowledge gathered at the workshop will go a long way towards helping the Historical Society complete the transition into its new home. Already, society members, with the help of the Rotary Club, have begun rearranging shelves in the old library to be used for storage.

Co-vice president Tom Gruber estimated the Historical Society has more than 700 pieces of clothing stored in the attics of St. Anthony's Church and its old headquarters, the Lothrop House.

Gruber said the storage room in the new headquarters, which will be located in the old fiction room, will provide a much better atmosphere that will help preserve the clothing from decay.

As far as design and construction goes, Gruber said the Historical Society was preparing to put to bid a project to build two senior, moderate income, affordable apartments in the old library's basement. The project will be funded by the Community Preservation Act and was approved at Town Meeting in March.

Gruber said that once architects begin designing plans for the apartments, he hopes construction will be completed within a year. But when it comes to improvements to the remainder of the building, Gruber said the Historical Society is waiting until the sale of the Lothrop House, which is on the market for $875,000.

"We have a lot of interest, but no offers have gone to fruition," he said.

On a recent tour of the old library, Gruber marveled at the building's uniqueness and emphasized what a good fit it would be for the Historical Society. He pointed to the four murals on the walls of the old library rotunda, which depict scenes from Cohasset's history. The murals were painted by Cohasset resident, the late MacIvor Reddie, and were first opened for display in 1946. David Wadsworth, Historical Society curator, writes about the murals in the latest issue of Historical Highlights, the society's quarterly newsletter.

Gruber said the society is planning for the main exhibit area to be in the room immediately to the left upon entering the old library, a room that was formerly was home to the library's new books. A wall will be constructed between that room and the fiction room, towards the back of the building, which will be used for storage.

Because the Historical Society has more than 17,000 items in its collection, it will rotate them in main display area to allow a variety of items to be showcased, Gruber said.

"One of the problems now is there are so many things and they're tucked away so no one can see them," he said. "One of the things we can do now is rotate items through."

Gruber said the room opposite the display room, the former reference room, would serve as a meeting room. He also said the thick wooden doors to those two rooms, now stored, would be rehinged in the doorways. He said the doors were one of many interesting structural elements in the old library that were invaluable.

"To replicate this stuff would just be incredibly expensive," he said.

Gruber is particularly impressed by the library's stacks, which include a glass floor. "This is very historic construction and I think it's something we need to save," he said.

A trip to the attic of the old library revealed a decorative iron semicircle that once perched in the window above the main entrance. A single lantern on a long iron pole, which Gruber believes also hung above the main entrance, was also there. He said the long term plan was to restore the two fixtures.

To learn more about the Historical Society's plans for its new home, attend an Open House at the old library on Saturday, May 31, from 4 to 6 p.m.

Lightkeepers to host Memorial Day cookout

The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation is pleased to invite everyone for hamburgers, hot dogs, soft drinks or coffee immediately following the Memorial Day Parade on May 26, at Bancroft Hall on Government Island.

The non-profit Lightkeepers Corporation was established in 1991 to renovate a former two-family lightkeepers' residence, no longer used as such because of automation of Minot's Light, and convert it into a function room for community use. The building is leased from the town but maintained and operated by the Lightkeepers Corporation. The generosity of Cohasset residents and others provided the funds for renovation. Operating and maintenance expenses, and reserves for capital replacements or improvements, are recovered from rental of two apartments on the second floor, and from fees charged to non-residents for use of the function room facilities. Cohasset residents may use the facilities for a nominal fee, and non-profit organizations at no charge.

This will be the seventh year (2003) that CLC has hosted Memorial Day attendees in recognition of the generosity of our supporters and we expect to serve over 1200 people again.

Historical society moving sale May 24

The Cohasset Historical Society is having a moving/yard/garage sale on Saturday, May 24 at the Caleb Lothrop House, 14 Summer St.. Donations of items (except clothing) are appreciated — please price each item. Drop off on Friday, May 23, 1 - 4 p.m. or Saturday before 9a.m. The society will be selling china, silver, prints, furniture, and rugs, as well as toys, appliances, LP's garden equipment, books and more.

Open House at the society's new headquarters, the Pratt Building, 106 South Main St. is on Saturday, May 31, from 4 - 6 p.m. View a sampling of future exhibits and hear about plans and dreams, and how everyone, in and out of town, can be a part of the future of the Cohasset Historical Society.

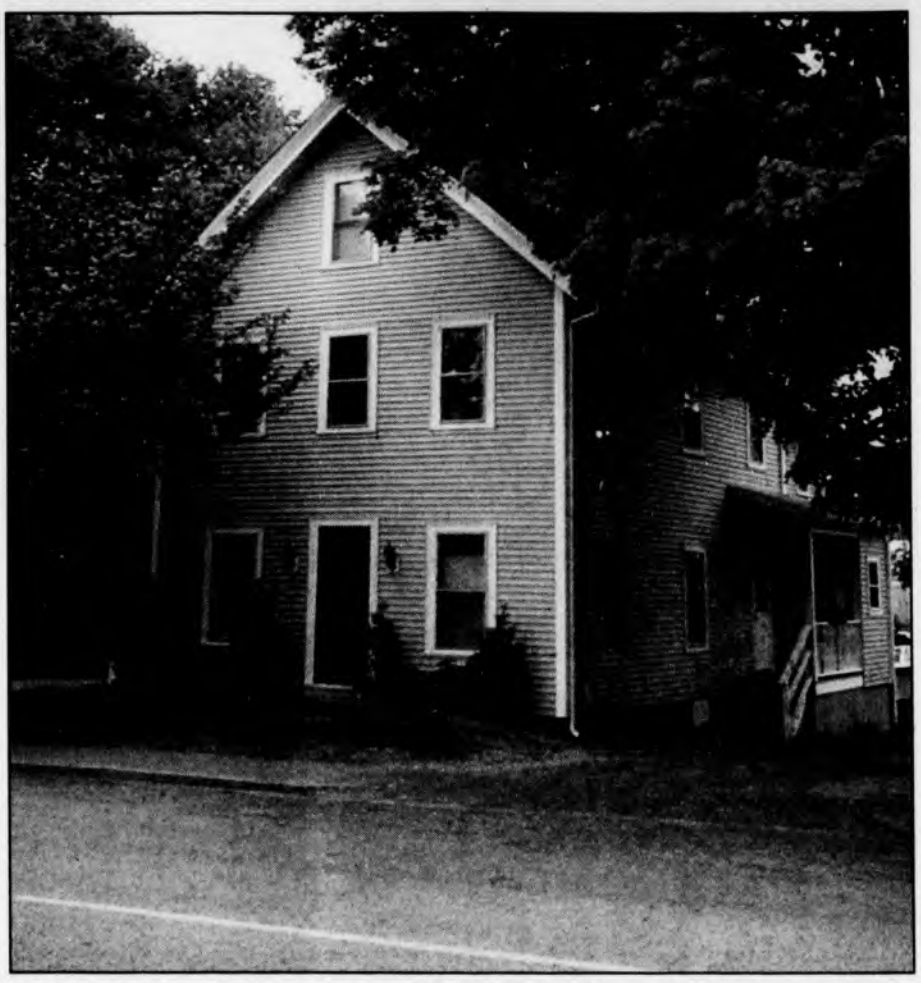
Habitat applications available

South Shore Habitat for Humanity is soliciting applications from families wishing to purchase an existing Habitat condominium residence at 43 Elm St., Cohasset. It is the first floor unit of a two-unit condo and has three bedrooms. South Shore Habitat has re-purchased this unit from the previous Habitat homeowner and will sell it to a family in need.

The selected family will purchase this condo at Habitat's cost and will receive 20-year, zero-interest financing by Habitat. This unit is priced at $69,500.



One of the condos at the Habitat house on Elm Street is for sale.

Qualified families who can demonstrate a severe housing need, whose income is within Habitat guidelines and who are financially qualified are encouraged to apply to purchase the home. Families will be chosen without respect to age, gender, sexual preference, disability, race, religion or national origin. There is no residency restriction for this project.

The selected family will purchase this condo at Habitat's cost and will receive 20-year, zero-interest financing by Habitat. This unit is priced at $69,500. The Habitat mortgage principal payment will be about $290 per month. The homeowners will also be responsible for paying property taxes, insurance and for home upkeep. South Shore Habitat will use the principal payments to finance future home construction or renovations for other families with housing needs in the South Shore area. The new homeowners must be willing to run the condo association in partnership with the owners of the second unit.

The selected family must also invest "sweat equity" time with Habitat. Because this condo unit is in fine condition, sweat equity work will be required at other Habitat sites throughout the South Shore. Construction work is being done in Marshfield, Easton, and Norwell.

The required 500 sweat equity hours can be accumulated by working along with other volunteers on construction, landscaping, site clean-up, fundraising and many other tasks. Sweat equity hours can be done by any family member; no construction skills are necessary. Most construction work takes place on Saturdays.

Prospective homeowners will be required to attend one informational meeting to learn about the project. Application forms are only available at these meetings. Two meetings have been scheduled as follows:

St. Stephens Church, 16 Highland Ave., Cohasset on * Saturday, June 7 from 10a.m.-noon and 7:30-9 p.m. Child care will be provided at both meetings.

All candidates should meet the following annual gross family income guidelines. Extenuating circumstances will be considered.

$23,000 - $33,000
Family of 4
$23,000 - $35,000
Family of 5
$23,000 - $37,000
Family of 6 or more
$23,000 - $39,000

The deadline for submission of applications will be June 23.

Time to get bitten by the Quest bug!

Quest Season is open. If going on a walk in a place of natural beauty has any appeal, then perhaps going on this same walk to search for a treasure box with the help of clues might add to this experience. On May 1, South Shore Quests will open for its fifth season with anew booklet of 19 quests located on the South Shore. The Quest season runs from May 1 through Nov. 15 with a few quests open through the winter months.

All you need is a quest booklet, available for $4 at Bookport in Hingham, the Hingham Public Library and the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell and the spirit of fun and adventure.

All you need is a quest booklet, available for $4 at Bookport in Hingham, the Hingham Public Library and the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell and the spirit of fun and adventure.

The Quest booklet provides you with the directions to the quest site, clues and a map to help you find the treasure box. In the box are a guest booklet and pen for you to sign and perhaps jot a note about your experiences, a rubber stamp and inkpad so you can stamp your Quest booklet and document your accomplishment and you will also find information about the area. If you are lucky enough to complete 10 quests, there is information in the booklet on how to send away for a South Shore Quest patch.

The quests do have an educational component with "Questions for the Curious" that encourages you to observe the flora, fauna and terrain as you go along. In the box you will also find information about the history of the area to enhance your visit.

The South Shore Quest Committee is a small group of volunteers, sponsored by the Appalachian Mountain Club who delight in designing new quests. They are always looking for new members either to design or monitor quests. There will be a "Quest Zest" on Sunday, Sept. 28 at the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell for anyone who would like more information about questing or would like to get more involved. All inquiries should be directed to Kim Juric at 781-749-6121 or emailing her at kjuric@attbi.com. Hopefully you'll get a chance to sample this as another way to enjoy the world around you. Who knows, you might just get bitten by the questing bug. Enjoy!

On that day, historic sites from Hingham to Plymouth — the Old Ordinary in Hingham, Captain John Wilson House in Cohasset, Cudworth House and Mann House in Scituate, Winslow House in Marshfield, King Caesar House, John Alden House and Gershom Bradford House in Duxbury, Major John Bradford House in Kingston, and the Harlow Old Fort House, Spooner House and Jabez Howland House in Plymouth — will open free of charge to the public from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Pilgrim Hall Museum will offer a special discount day (children 5 to 17 free, adults $4).

Visitors can pick up the new Back Roads of the South Shore map at any of the above-mentioned sites that day. Guided tours will be available, and raffle tickets for special prizes will be sold at each historic site.

WORSHIP NOTES

'Silent No More' talk on abortion

Georgette Forney, a nationally-known spokesperson on behalf of post-abortive women, will speak on Friday, May 30 from 7-9 p.m. at St. Paul School Hall, 18 Fearing Road, Hingham. Forney is co-founder of Silent No More, a national campaign that includes actress Jennifer O'Neill and aims to raise awareness about the after-effects of abortion.

The Silent No More campaign also seeks to reach out to women by offering them abortion recovery help. According to testimony that O'Neill gave at a Capitol Hill briefing last fall, 43 percent of women who have reached the age of 45 have had an abortion. This means that every third child who is conceived is aborted.

Forney had an abortion at age 16, and at age 35 she experience healing and forgiveness by going through the Forgiven and Set Free abortion-recovery program. Through this experience, she developed a greater understanding of the negative impact that abortion has on society and on women, and a desire to share the knowledge that help is available.

Forney is also executive director for NOEL, the National Organization of Episcopalians for Life. In addition, she is on the steering committee for the Women Deserve Better Campaign — a pro-life coalition outreach effort dedicated to showing how abortion hurts women and provides practical alternatives. Forney's talk is free and open to the public. It is part of a statewide tour and is sponsored locally by the South Shore and Braintree-Weymouth Chapters of Massachusetts Citizens for Life.

Police issue TV, computer scam alert

Cohasset police say a scam is being perpetrated by a subject calling businesses stating he has access to an overstock of plasma televisions or computers.

In some cases, printers are included. He often uses the name "George Collins," as being the brother of the caller, who works for United Parcel Service (UPS) or is manager at a local electronics store. After some quick small talk and an agreed upon price, usually thousands of dollars, the potential victim is asked to meet in a parking lot and to bring cash, no checks. If the victim goes to the designated shopping center parking lot and waits, suddenly a guy appears and asks for the envelope containing the cash. The perpetrator presents a store receipt (phony receipt but looks authentic) and says he'll be right back. He's never seen again. The victim will never see the money again either.

Any residents who get a telephone call like this should call the police, Chief Robert Jackson says.

This scam is happening every day. People are falling for this old scam that's been around for years. Most cases don't get reported because the victims are embarrassed that they got scammed in the first place, police said.

Think Smart — Some Other Clues To Look For:

1. If something sounds too good to be true., it probably is.

2. Caller wants to meet you in the parking lot.

3. Someone will approach you in the parking lot with a sales receipt.

4. Caller wants you to bring cash in an envelope.

5. Callers says, "No Checks - Cash Only".

6. My brother's the manager of…. and he can get…

7. My brother works for UPS and there's an overstock of computers

8. Phone call offering computers at an unbelievable price.

9. Repeated telephone calls forcing you to make a decision.

10. Caller is selling television sets, DVD players or other electronics.

What should you do if you get a telephone call?

1. Hang Up!

2. Tell the caller you're not interested.

3. Do not give out any information about your business.

4. Set up a meeting but call the police; the police will go undercover.

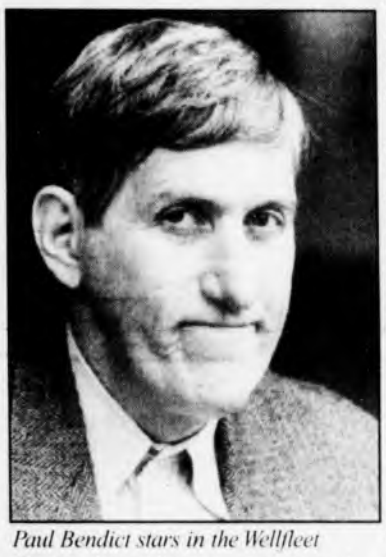
Actor Paul Benedict headlines in Wellfleet theater production

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Paul Benedict isn't an Englishman. He just played one on television. Indeed, many people who know Benedict only from his long run as the oh-so British Mr. Bentley on the CBS sitcom, "The Jeffersons" (1975-85), believe he must have been raised across the pond.

Benedict, 64, was actually born in Silver City, New Mexico, while his father was stationed there in the military, and grew up in Massachusetts. He now has a summer home on Martha's Vineyard, which allows him to remain close with a family that includes a sister in Milton, a niece in Yarmouth and a nephew in Hyannis. Benedict's late mother also lived in Quincy for several years.



Paul Bendict stars in the Wellfleet Harbor Actors Theater production of "The Unexpected Man."

A 1960 graduate of Suffolk University, Benedict was an original member of the now legendary Theater Company of Boston, under Artistic Director David Wheeler.

For seven seasons, beginning in 1963, Benedict worked with the Company as an actor and director, in numerous plays mounted at a tiny 100-seat theater in the old Hotel Bostonian in the Fenway. In addition to Benedict, Wheeler's young acting company included Robert DeNiro, Blythe Danner, Robert Duvall, Dustin Hoffman, Jon Voight, Al Pacino, and a young college student Benedict first met in Cambridge.

"I hired Stockard Channing right out of Harvard, and we've been good friends ever since" recalled Benedict by telephone last week from Cape Cod where he was in rehearsals for "The Unexpected Man," which opens this week at the Wellfleet Harbor Actors Theater. The play, by Yasmina Reza, is being directed at Wellfleet by Wheeler.

"I've had a great allegiance to David Wheeler since our days in Boston. We manage to work together every now and again, for which I am always grateful," says Benedict. "When David approached me about doing this piece at Wellfleet, I said yes right away. I like the play, because it offers a good mix of comedy and drama. And, there is only one David Wheeler. He is just brilliant."

In addition to his many Broadway and television credits, Benedict has also appeared in more than 30 feature films including "Waiting for Guffman," "The Freshman," "The Addams Family" and "This Is Spinal Tap." While he has enjoyed success in all three acting mediums, Benedict is clear about his favorite.

Written by Reza, who won a Tony Award for "Art" a few seasons back and is currently represented on Broadway by "Life x 3," "The Unexpected Man" is the story of well-known, embittered author who encounters a fan of his work when he is seated opposite her on a train. The woman is a passionate admirer of the author's work, but she is also aloof and preoccupied with death.

"My take on this piece is that the two people are on a journey — a literal train journey as well as a psychological journey," explains Benedict. "It's a very good play with very strong characters. The gentleman I play is a bit of Norman Mailer and a bit of Samuel Beckett. I like the character very much, but he can be a real jerk which has left him bitter and confused."

In addition to his many Broadway and television credits, Benedict has also appeared in more than 30 feature films including "Waiting for Guffman," "The Freshman," "The Addams Family" and "This Is Spinal Tap." While he has enjoyed success in all three acting mediums, Benedict is clear about his favorite.

"I prefer the stage, as any serious actor does. There is nothing that compares to the sense of immediacy you have on stage. You just can't make a living in the theater."

Benedict acknowledges that it has sometimes bothered him

Scituate artist captures seascapes on canvas

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Sky, Ships and Sea — some might call them the Holy Trinity of New England coastal life, community and history. Especially artists of the traditional school such as oil painter Charlie Stockbridge of Scituate.

Stockbridge's current exhibit, titled "Sky * Ships * Sea," is only the second solo public showing of his works since the investment banker first took up painting eight years ago. The show is on view through May 25 at the Scituate Art Gallery, which is also the home of the Scituate Arts Association where Stockbridge serves as president.

Observing from a Southern New England perspective — the South Shore to Cape Cod to Martha's Vineyard region — Stockbridge offers inviting oceanfront landscapes and seacraft scenes that once again remind viewers of the area's heritage and have always been the artist's own creative muse.

Before shifting his interests to painting, Stockbridge also practiced the woodcarving craft, studying for a number of years with a well-noted South Shore carver and former Scituate resident Paul McCarthy. "Sky * Ships * Sea" includes two of the artist's works in this medium along with his selection of eight paintings.

"I've had a lifelong love of the ocean and any natural marine life scenes," said Stockbridge amidst his mounted works at the Scituate Gallery's Front Street location, which will soon find new quarters a few doors down in the event of expected condo developments. "I've also always liked the 19th century American landscape and seascape masters, such as Fitz Hugh Lane and Martin Johnson Heade, who is the acknowledged 'marshmaster' painter of marsh and inland river scenes. With my work, I'm combining those two longtime interests."

"I've had a lifelong love of the ocean and any natural marine life scenes. I've also always liked the 19th century American landscape and seascape masters, such as Fitz Hugh Lane and Martin Johnson Heade, who is the acknowledged 'marshmaster' painter of marsh and inland river scenes. With my work, I'm combining those two longtime interests."

Scituate Arts Association President and artist Charles Stockbridge

The artist's centerpiece of "Sky * Ships * Sea" is "Thomas W. Lawson," a splendid oil rendering of the "fantasy ship" schooner built at Fore River Shipyard a century ago and named for one of this area's prominent residents of the day, the "Copper King" financier and commodity speculator for whom Stockbridge cleverly adds the characterization of pompous. Thomas W. Lawson the ship sailed from 1902 to '07, carrying coal for the east coast trade, later converting to an oil tanker, before sinking off a place ironically named Scilly Isles, Hellweather Reef near Lands End, England.

The rest of the artist's works on view are also scheduled to be made available in limited edition prints beginning June 1. Stockbridge interprets the styles of Lane and Meade his own way impressively on the respective works "Scituate Harbor 1902" and "The Great North River Marsh" — "a scene so familiar to passers-by over the bridge on Route 3A." Other pieces take the viewer from "Moonlight on Scituate Harbor" to "Brant Point Light" and "Edgartown-Choppy-Cape Pogue."

Stockbridge lends homage to his woodworking past with a pair of Bellamy Eagle replicas, sporting 22k gold finish in the style of the American folk art eagle master John Haley Bellamy. Also, to his own artistic family by adding works by three of his late relatives, including two clipper ship paintings by his grandfather Frederic Stockbridge — a noted illustrator and marine artist, a reverse glass and tole painting by his mother Margaret Stockbridge, and a watercolor by his aunt Florence Bates Patten.

*"Sky * Ships * Sea" will be on display at the Scituate Arts Association gallery in Scituate Harbor through May 25. For gallery hours and information on the exhibit contact the Scituate Arts Association at (781) 545-6150.*

Rediscovering the Rueben

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Whether the original Rueben sandwich was invented in 1914 at Rueben's in Manhattan or created for Charlie Chaplin's leading lady, Annette Seelos, is a matter for historians, and not cooks. What is of interest to cooks is that since it stumbled on the American culinary scene with its mongrel ingredient list – corned beef, rye, Swiss cheese, and sauerkraut – it has won sandwich contests as well as the hearts and minds of hungry Americans. Sweet and salty, hot and cool, tender and crisp, a good Rueben is much like Sophia Loren, an odd mixture of parts that comes together to form the perfect whole.

Although simple in construct, lots can go wrong with a bad Rueben: hot sauce in the dressing, tough corned beef, soggy bread, and a serious case of wrong proportions. Each component needs to be chosen properly and carefully balanced with each of the others. I began my testing with the dressing. Russian dressing is a combination of mayonnaise and ketchup with the addition of Worcestershire, onion, and sometimes horseradish, pimento, peppers, celery, parsley, chili sauce, or vinegar. I started with 1/2 cup mayonnaise as the base and added to it 2 tablespoons ketchup. That offered me the creamy, sweet tangy base that I was looking for. A half-teaspoon of Worcestershire sauce, 1 1/2 teaspoons chopped shallot, and 3/4-teaspoon horseradish were the only ingredients that worked well. I tested and rejected pimento, pepper, celery, parsley, chili sauce, and many types of vinegar. Even salt and pepper were not necessary.

As for the corned beef, there are two supermarket choices: corned beef brisket and round, the former more tender and therefore my top choice. I tried two brands – Boars Head and Pearl – and didn't notice much difference between them. I found about four ounces of meat that had been thinly sliced was enough to make a good-sized sandwich (New Yorkers used to mile-high Ruebens may wish to use more, although it is difficult to grill a thick sandwich). For bread, I preferred pumpernickel: black Russian rye was stronger and light rye was less flavorful. If you purchase your bread at the supermarket, look for deli-style bread that has a firm, moist texture and is sold in a large (maybe 5 1/2 inches or so) oval shape. (An "ethnic" name on the wrapper is also a good sign.)

As for the other ingredients, Swiss is the cheese traditionally used in the Rueben. Gruyere worked but isn't as easy to find. Mozzarella, American, Jack or cheddar just didn't taste right. Sauerkraut is sold in jars in the refrigerated section of most grocers. As with the corned beef, it all tasted the same. I found for each sandwich, I wanted about 1/4 cup of well-drained kraut. Of course I tried marinating the kraut in the Russian dressing (a technique used in some recipes) and found it a waste of time. I also tried substituting coleslaw for the sauerkraut but preferred the latter.

The assembly is easy enough. I used about 1 1/2 tablespoons of Russian dressing (a generous amount) per sandwich. Once the sandwich was put together I had to decide the best way to grill or toast it. I tried using the oven, as a recipe at FoodTV.com suggested, and the bread was warm but soggy. I wanted the crispy exterior of a grilled cheese so I moved on to a skillet. I buttered the bread and then toasted (grilled) the sandwiches over medium heat for about 2 1/2 to 3 minutes on each side. This left me with a well-browned and crisp exterior, melted cheese and a cool interior. Not only was this as described in the original recipe – it was delicious.

CLASSIC GRILLED REUBEN

If you want your Rueben hot all the way through, (this recipes leaves you with a slightly cool center) reduce the heat to low once both sides have browned and continue to cook for an additional 1 1/2 minutes on each side. You may also substitute Dijon mustard for the Russian dressing or eat the sandwich cold. If you substitute pastrami for the corned beef you have created Rueben's sister sandwich, the Rachel.

Russian Dressing

1/2 cup mayonnaise, regular or light (not low- or no-fat)

2 tablespoons ketchup or chili sauce

1/2 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce

3/4 teaspoons prepared horseradish

1 1/2 teaspoons finely chopped shallot

The Sandwich

8 slices deli-style pumpernickel or rye bread

8 thin slices Swiss cheese

1 pound sauerkraut, drained well

3 tablespoons plus 1 teaspoon softened butter

1. For the dressing, mix all of the ingredients together in a small bowl. Use immediately or store covered in the refrigerator where it will keep for several days. Makes about 3/4 cup.

2. Heat a large skillet over medium heat. Place 2 slices of cheese on a slice of bread folding it over so it is not hanging off of the sides. Place four ounces of meat on top of the bread in the same manner. Top the meat with 1/4-cup sauerkraut. Spread about 1 1/2 tablespoons Russian dressing on another slice of bread and place it on the kraut, dressing side down. Spread one teaspoon of butter on top of the sandwich, flip it over and repeat with one more teaspoon of butter. Assemble the remaining three sandwiches in the same way.

3. Place the sandwiches in the hot skillet (you can cook them in batches if necessary) and cook until dark golden brown, about three minutes. Flip and cook on the second side until well-browned, about three minutes more. Remove from skillet and cut each sandwich in half. Serve immediately.

that he is best-known for "The Jeffersons," which because of syndicated repeats and the TV Land and Nick at Nite cable outlets has never really been off the air in the 18 years since it was cancelled.

"No matter where I go, people still seem to recognize me from that show. Unless I'm in New York, and then I might get stopped on the street by someone has seen me in a play. At this point in my life, however, I've made my peace with 'The Jeffersons.' Television and movies are wonderful places to work, especially if you want to make money. If I could, however, I would work only on the stage."

Wellfleet opens 19th season

Wellfleet Harbor Actors Theater, the oldest, professional non-profit theater on Cape Cod, opens its 19th season this week with "The Unexpected Man," through June 7. The rest of the season at Wellfleet will include:

"THE ART ROOM," June 12 - July 5, in its New England premiere is a comedy inspired by a neglected Georges Feydeau farce from Billy Aronson, the author of the original concept for the musical "Rent."

"JEWBANO," June 30 - Aug. 26, written and performed by Frank Speiser is a stand-up routine that melds memories, music and mimicry of a life that began in Cuba and ended up on Cape Cod, via Bensonhurst and the Catskills - or as Speiser calls them, "the Jewish Alps."

"LIVE GIRLS," July 10 - July 26, is a world premiere from playwright Victoria Stewart, former assistant to performance artist Anna Deavere Smith, who describes the play as "an exploration of race, sex and ethics when the worlds of pornography and reality-based performance art intersect."

"PROOF," July 31 - Aug. 30, David Auburn's critically acclaimed Pulitzer Prize-winning play dealing with the discovery of a groundbreaking mathematical formula serves as a trigger to set off a psychological mystery surrounding its authorship while asking intriguing questions about the link between genius and insanity.

"LOBBY HERO," Sept. 4 - 27, a comic drama by Kenneth Lonergan set in the lobby of a Manhattan high-rise, where we first meet Jeff, a security guard working the night shift. He's feckless, friendly, talks too much and is very much aware that his life is going nowhere - and going nowhere quickly.

"TRUE WEST," Oct. 2 - 19, Sam Shepard's contemporary work — a mythic, quirky dark comedy of sibling rivalry, brotherly love (and hate), Hollywood values and buttered toast - rocks as its tells the tale of two brothers thrown together after years of separation. It also shakes, rattles and rolls. Austin is an aspiring screenwriter working on the story that he hopes will catapult him to stardom.

(Tickets for all performances are $21 - with student standby tickets for half-price. Season subscriptions are also available: Receive tickets for all seven shows for the price of six. Tickets and subscriptions may be reserved by calling the WHAT box-office at 508/349-6835. Tickets may also be ordered at www.what.org.)

The sweet scents of springtime

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the sun rose on a chilly Sunday morning in mid-May, brilliant sunshine streamed through the treetops, quickly melting the crystalline coating of frost that blanketed my lawn. Although many communities were likely spared this frosty interlude, those of us who live in low areas have learned to be patient during the month of May and heed the traditional warning of waiting until Memorial Day to plant tender annuals and vegetables. Experienced South Shore gardeners realize that little is gained, and all may be lost, if delicate plants are put into the ground prior to the end of May. Warm weather annuals and vegetables, including tomatoes, require temperatures consistently above 65 degrees to develop properly and temperatures below 50 degrees may permanently stunt growth or flower production.

A stroll through the gardens later in the day revealed only minor damage caused by frosty overnight temperatures. The delicate new foliage of Japanese ferns and a few trees and shrubs hung limp and darkened but the majority of frost-sensitive plants seem to have been spared. For a brief moment I was grateful for our unseasonably cool spring which has delayed tender growth and minimized the potential injury that may result from a late season frost. Warmer temperatures are predicted for the upcoming week and at long last, it appears that gardeners may finally be able to enjoy their spring planting rituals.

As you make your annual springtime pilgrimage to the local nurseries this season, consider purchasing plants that offer pleasure for all the senses. Although visual enjoyment tends to dominate our designs, few can deny the irresistible urge to stroke the soft, fuzzy leaves of lamb's ears (Stachys) or pat the silky foliage of Artemisia 'Silver Mound'. Ornamental grasses provide sound, texture and motion and are valuable additions to the fall and winter landscape. Fragrant plants offer a lasting impression that often lingers from season to season.

As you make your annual springtime pilgrimage to the local nurseries this season, consider purchasing plants that offer pleasure for all the senses.

Through the years, I have gradually accumulated a wide variety of shrubs, vines, herbs and perennials that are visually attractive in addition to offering aromatic flowers or foliage. When selecting plants to provide fragrance in the landscape, plant for a sequence of sweet-smelling flowers or strategically locate individual fragrant plants along various walkways, porches, doorways or gates so that you may enjoy pleasing scents as you stroll by.

Plants that delight the sense of smell surround the archway that leads to my backyard gardens. During the month of May, a patch of lily-of-the-valley (Convallaria) offers its sweet perfume for those who pass through. A tiny rhizome was accidentally introduced into my garden years ago among plants I received as a gift and in recent years it has spread vigorously to produce a dense carpet. The slender, arching stems, bearing dainty, white, bell-shaped flowers, glisten in the dappled sunlight against a dense backdrop of large, satiny green leaves. The flowers of this rhizomatous groundcover rekindle childhood memories of wandering through my mother's woodland garden, picking bouquets of these fragrant stalks along with pink and blue wood hyacinths and sunny yellow buttercups.

In recent years I have added a pink-flowering variety, C. rosea, and a rather unique variegated form, C. albostriata, characterized by longitudinal white stripes on the foliage although the latter has a tendency to revert to solid green leaves as it spreads. A hardy groundcover for moisture-retentive soils in sun or part shade, it is ideally suited for the naturalistic, woodland garden but may be too aggressive to be used in a formal, shady perennial border. Division is usually best performed in autumn.

Few fragrant shrubs are better known than lilacs (Syringa). These suckering, deciduous shrubs produce elegant, sweetly scented, conical clusters containing a myriad of small, tubular, single or double flowers in shades of pink, lavender, blue, purple, or white. Numerous varieties are available, although the most popular types tend to be cultivars of the French lilacs (S. vulgaris) which exhibit rounded, heart-shaped leaves and may grow to an ultimate height of 20 feet or more. These floriferous shrubs should be grown in full sun in a neutral to alkaline, moisture-retentive soil. Lime should be applied around the base of plants on a yearly basis. Powdery mildew, leaf spot, and borers can be a problem.

As shrubs mature and expand in width and height, a vigorous renewal pruning, shortly after the blooms fade, may be advisable. Older trunks can be reduced to a foot or two in height or cut to the ground and will sprout new growth creating a denser, bushier shrub. It is usually wise to prune about one-third of the trunks each season to rejuvenate an old, leggy specimen.

In addition to the common lilac, several other types of lilacs are usually available through local sources. I am particularly fond of several varieties which demonstrate smaller stature and foliage including the Korean lilac (S. meyeri) which maintains a height of only 5 feet, and S. 'Miss Kim' which reaches 8 feet at maturity. Flower clusters tend to be smaller but very fragrant and may exhibit sporadic bloom in autumn. These shrubs seem to be less susceptible to disease and pests than their showier cousins. There is also an elegant Japanese tree lilac (S. reticulata) with handsome reddish-brown bark and aromatic white flowers.

The showy, sweet-scented blooms of lilacs are irresistible to butterflies and hummingbirds and a bouquet brought into your home will instantly fill the room with their heavenly perfume.

TOO LOUD FOR COMFORT

Loudness discomfort is typically a problem for those who suffer from sensorineural (nerve) hearing loss. As we age, the number of hair cells and nerve fibers, which are responsible for picking up sounds in the inner ear, is reduced. In addition, the ability to grade different intensities of sound becomes impaired. To compensate for this reduction in hearing ability, the remaining nerve fibers switch on to produce nearly maximum loudness, making even moderate sounds seem unbearably loud. When a person with a narrowed or reduced dynamic range makes use of a hearing instrument, it should not overload the ear with amplified sounds. Thus, many instruments employ "peak clipping" or a more sophisticated form of compression known as automatic volume control.

Hypersensitivity to loud sounds, the loss of sensitivity to soft sounds, and reduced clarity make selecting and adjusting to the appropriate hearing instrument a rather complex job. But thanks to the advanced technology presently available, most people can benefit surprisingly well from today's hearing instruments. Is your hearing less than it should be? Call us at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 781-337-1144, and let's determine the best way to proceed. We're located at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), opposite the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits and Mass Health.

P.S. The use of a white noise masker may help those for whom loudness discomfort is a problem.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MAY 21

The sun enters Gemini at 7:12 a.m., and the green light goes on for new starts across the board. The sun will travel in dualistic Gemini until June 21. The moon travels in Aquarius, conjoining Neptune at 10:33 a.m. Give extra attention to accuracy this morning, so that you don't overlook significant details. The moon and Mars conjoin at 5:53 p.m., making this period ideal for sports and physical activities.

THURSDAY, MAY 22

You can be most productive this morning, particularly if you are working on projects that need help or input from others. New starts in your business or personal life are recommended. Promote new ideas and launch campaigns before 2:49 p.m., when the Aquarius moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. At 5:41 p.m. the moon enters Pisces, and the last quarter phase of the moon begins at 8:31 p.m. This moon will decrease in light until May 31, when a potent new moon culminates. A lunar alignment to Uranus this evening can go either way. It may bring unexpected disruptions or exciting surprises.

FRIDAY, MAY 23

Planetary action can make for a topsy-turvy day. It can be difficult to get anything accomplished. Take it slow and easy. The moon travels in Pisces, highlighting all forms of creativity. However, 90-degree alignments of Mercury-Jupiter and the sun-Uranus are in high focus. Don't start anything new; avoid acting on impulse. Expect the unexpected.

SATURDAY, MAY 24

Potentially difficult astrological influences move out early in the day. The sun and Uranus align at 3:35 a.m. The moon forms a challenging 90-degree contact to Pluto at 6:19 a.m. However, this is not a typical laidback Pisces moon. That's because Mars prepares to interact with Pluto, generating high energy and ambition. If you organize your time, you can get work projects out of the way quickly. The evening is prime for partying. Gather with friends and go for the good times.

SUNDAY, MAY 25

Fair and sunny astrological weather prevails today and tomorrow. The Pisces moon becomes inactive at 1:33 a.m. until 3:59 a.m., when it enters fiery Aries. Venus prepares to interact with Jupiter, making this day ideal for doing things you like to do, as long as there's nothing you have to do. Put career or domestic concerns on the back burner; concentrate on relaxing and enjoying life to the fullest.

MONDAY, MAY 26

An Aries moon all day continues to generate high energy, making it prime for sports, physical activities. In addition, Mercury, Venus and Neptune interact, adding an easygoing, relaxed mood. This combination is a perfect planetary backdrop for a holiday. It means that this is a day to kick back, feel good, follow your bliss.

TUESDAY, MAY 27

Planetary influences continue to rate high. This morning is favorable for initiating new activities, getting things done. You can be most productive. Be sure to launch ventures before 2:41 p.m., when the Aries moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. The moon enters Taurus at 4:32 p.m., and the green light for new starts goes on again. A harmonious contact to Uranus makes this evening prime for new experiences, meeting people, establishing new relationships.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 28

A Taurus moon sets a relaxed pace today. Take it slow and easy. Influences are particularly favorable for developing projects that require your imagination and creativity. Lunar alignments to Neptune, Venus and Mercury set the stage for a romantic evening.

THURSDAY, MAY 29

The next couple of days have their challenges. Resolve to maintain a peaceful, positive attitude. A lunar alignment to Mars affects this morning. Others may be irritable, aggressive, argumentative. Don't make waves. Channel energy constructively; take on a big work project and stick to it. At 11:53 a.m. the Taurus moon becomes inactive for the remainder of the day.

FRIDAY, MAY 30

At 5:32 a.m. the moon enters Gemini, beginning the final windup to a new moon. This new moon is particularly powerful, because it is accompanied by a solar eclipse. The dark side is a time for cleaning out, letting go, preparing for new starts. A lunar alignment to Uranus at 11:10 a.m. may disrupt the flow of the morning. Be flexible. Spend time alone this evening; meditate for inner peace and vision.

Sticker shock?

All-facilities decals cost $30

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

When stickers for use of the Sandy Beach parking lot and the Recycling Transfer Facility go on sale in June, some residents may be surprised to learn the fees have been restructured.

In April, at the suggestion of the Town Clerk's office, Selectmen voted 3 to 1 to eliminate the option to purchase a beach parking sticker, offering only a more expensive, "all-facilities" sticker, which gives access to both the beach parking lot and the transfer station.

Last year, beach stickers could be purchased for $7 for the first and $3 for the second. Meanwhile, all-facilities stickers were offered for $35 for the first and $20 for the second. Now, the only sticker available is the all-facilities one, costing $30 each and $15 for seniors.

According to Town Manager Mark Haddad, the new fee structure will not significantly increase revenue but will save

Marine recalls Memorial Day 12 years ago

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The weather tried to be the biggest story on Memorial Day as an oft-torrential downpour did its best to dampen Cohasset's annual observances.

But the windy, rainy day paled in comparison to the countless days of battle during which generation after generation of the town's finest served and fought in faraway places such as on beaches of Normandy, in the jungles of Vietnam, the mountains of Afghanistan, or during sandstorms in the Iraqi desert. Those Cohasseters who made the ultimate sacrifice were remembered Monday.

"I don't think I've ever been so proud as I am today," Steve Wigmore, commander of the George H. Mealy American Legion Post, told the drenched crowd that swelled to the hundreds, many of whom were huddled under umbrellas.

Dog loves new digs at Sunrise

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Brian no longer lives in the fast lane, and that's fine with him.

Apart from jaunts on the grass outside his new Cohasset home, he's perfectly happy to lounge around and be a "coach potato."

"This dog is precious. You just can't help to like him."
— Denise Baxter, Sunrise Senior Living

The four-year-old greyhound used to spend 22 hours a day in a cage when he wasn't reaching speeds of up to 45 mph running at the Taunton-Raynham Race Track. Now he's thoroughly enjoying retirement while at the same time being spoiled by the dozens of residents at Sunrise Senior Living on Route 3A.

After two unsuccessful tries with other breeds of dogs, Sunrise adopted Brian in April from Greyhound Pets of America, says Sunrise Executive Director Denise Baxter.

"We've been trying to adopt a dog for a long time but we had not had good success with the right match," she says. Baxter explained that Sunrise — which has upwards of 330 communities for seniors in the

Sign bylaw is under review

Constitutionality being questioned

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Town Counsel Paul DeRensis is reviewing the town's sign bylaw to determine if it violates the First Amendment.

Selectman Fred Koed requested the review after reading about a court ruling that found a Braintree bylaw regulating political campaign signs to be unconstitutional. Koed is worried Cohasset's sign bylaw, although it makes no direct reference to political signs, may be guilty of the same offense.

"We're overseas defending the constitution right now, so I think we have an obligation to figure it out."
— Selectman Fred Koed

"I asked town counsel to review it because of the importance of free speech and the First Amendment," Koed said in an interview this week "We're overseas defending the constitution right now, so I think we have an obligation to figure it out."

DeRensis declined to comment on the sign bylaw until his review is completed. Koed said what may have to happen is that political signs will have to be regulated similarly to real estate signs.

Currently, most of Cohasset follows the "unwritten rule" that political signs should be posted no earlier than two weeks before an election and no longer than a week after. It's similar to the way that the bylaws regulate temporary signs advertising a public entertainment, charitable, religious or educational event.

But Koed said conflicts arise as to whether that policy is fair for political signs. "There's always problems with political signs," he said. "Ambitious campaigns start early. People lose and then leave their signs up for a while, and sometimes that upsets people. But on the other side of the coin, people say 'Hey, it's free speech.' So there needs to be a balance. We need to make sure free speech is protected."

Building Inspector Bob Egan said a few years ago, the town used to charge $10 for a building permit to allow 10 signs to be posted. Then, when that policy was challenged, Town Counsel advised Egan to stop enforcing the sign bylaw on political signs altogether, because he did not want the town to be in jeopardy of a lawsuit based on First Amendment rights.

"It's a hands off thing," Egan said of regulating political signs. "A few years ago, I used to call people up and tell them they put their signs up too early...Now, we really don't have rules as much as agreements. If someone like a political candidate calls me, I tell them (the town

Recycling earns $4K state grant

The Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) has awarded the Town of Cohasset $4,228 for recycling 597 tons of trash over a six-month period through its Municipal Recycling Incentive Program (MRIP).

The MRIP program rewards cities and towns that take steps to improve their recycling programs by paying them twice a year for each ton of material that is recycled by their residents. These payments are then invested back into community programs to make further program improvements. Over the past 5-1/2 years, nearly $13 million have been paid to Massachusetts cities and towns through the MRIP program. MRIP is funded by the state's Clean Environment Fund, which is comprised of unclaimed beverage container deposits.

Cohasset receives a payment of $4 per ton for each ton of glass, paper, cans, and plastic that residents recycled. But, for every additional ton that was recycled compared with last year, Cohasset was paid at a bonus rate of $20 per ton.

Each year, recycling in Massachusetts reduces greenhouse gas emissions by nearly 1 million tons of carbon equivalent, saves enough energy to power 140,000 homes, and supports 12,000 jobs and $600 million of economic development.

The Department of Environmental Protection is responsible for ensuring clean air and water, safe management of solid and hazardous waste, timely cleanup of hazardous waste sites and spills, and the preservation of wetlands and coastal resources.

Water mains being replaced

The Water Commission has begun to replace about two miles of water mains this year in its 2003 Water System Improvements Program

"These water main replacements will help improve fire protection and water service throughout Cohasset," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission. "We have been able to finance the $2,400,000 needed for these projects without raising water rates, because of our careful management of our financial resources."

"We have just begun to replace undersized water mains on the Hillside – Bancroft Road, Hill Street, Norfolk Road, and Oak Street," he said. "We will then replace pipes on South Main Street (Beechwood – the Scituate Line), North Main Street (Forest Ave. – Rocky Lane), Doane Street, and, after Labor Day, Parker Ave."

In 2003, the Water Commission will improve watershed protection by designing changes to the town stormwater drainage system in the Lily Pond Watershed that will help reduce nutrient loading and prevent the drainage of contaminants into Lily Pond. The Commission will be applying for grant funds that could pay for 60 percent of the costs of this program, said McNabb.

During 2003, the Water Commission will also make improvements and upgrades to the 25-year old Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant. "We are almost finished with the installation of Variable Flow Drives (VFD's) for the finished water pumps and flow paced chemical feeds, which will help improve plant performance," said McNabb. "This year we will also have Weston & Sampson design improvements to the water intake structure and to make a number of additional upgrades to the plant operations."

Tenants Association makes Harborview a better place

Activities picking up in summer months

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Look for increased activity at the Harborview Apartments at 60 Elm St. in the coming months.

The Harborview Tenants Association is preparing for a summer full of activities for the senior citizens who live in the 28-year-old state-subsidized apartment complex.

The Tenants Association gave a brief summary of their planned activities to the Housing Authority on Tuesday night.

Already, the association has hosted a clean-up day and a pot luck supper. Monday morning coffee and doughnuts have become a weekly occurrence, and movie nights have been happening once a month.

"Everyone seems to want to participate and they're eager to do all these things," said Arlene Tuohey, president of the association.

Vice President Gracie Thompson, who is also the organizer of the Harborview Garden Club, said that group has been meeting twice a week for the past two months. Thompson is coordinating a yard sale and a raffle in the coming months to pay for new plantings in the courtyards. She said any donations of flowers would be appreciated.

"The place is going to look really spiffy in another month or so," said Tuohey.

Tuohey also said the Harborview Tenants Association was looking to start a Red Hat Club for Cohasset, where ladies don shades of red and meet for tea.

Housing Authority member Rich Silvia was impressed by the participation that the Tenants Association had encouraged. "It's exciting," he said. "It's

Construction of new tide gates will begin June 9

New design aimed at rehabbing salt marsh

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The tide gates at Cohasset Harbor will be replaced this summer with a design that will allow more saltwater to flow into Jacob's Meadow. Engineers say the new, "self-regulating" tide gates will prevent the spread of phragmites, an invasive freshwater plant that threatens the rehabilitation of salt marsh in the area.

The current tide gates, known as flapper gates, were designed by Tutela Engineering Associates and were installed in 1999. Funded by a federal flood control grant, the project received all the necessary state and local permits, but it lacked any review or permitting by the Army Corps of Engineers.

The Army Corps ruled it should have been consulted after federal officials from the Environmental Protection Agency stumbled upon the tide gates project shortly after they were completed. Tutela engineers, however, said the state failed to mention that Army Corps approval was needed.

After months of studying salinity and water levels, the Army Corps decided self-regulating tides gates would be necessary. Tutela completed the design and acquired Army Corps permits for the project at no extra cost to the Town. Now, the Town has awarded a bid to AGM Marine for construction, which is set to begin June 9 and last until September.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said AGM Marine's bid for the project came in at $56,000, about $30,000 less than Tutela had estimated it would cost. But the Town will not be picking up the tab, Haddad said, because the project is funded by grants from the Federal Emergency Management Association and the Massachusetts Emergency Management Association.

Unlike the flapper gates, the self-regulating tide gates will allow a certain amount of saltwater to flow back into Jacob's Meadow and James Brook at high tide. Officials hope the replenishment of saltwater will help kill the phragmites, the 10-foot high freshwater reeds that threaten nearby saltwater grasses, impede James Brook's flow pattern and cut off brook access for fish that normally eat mosquito larvae.

"The flapper gate pushes against the outlet and holds the water from going into the meadow," said Selectman Merle Brown, who has followed the matter closely. "This gate has a float. It'll allow the water to go in, and when it gets to a certain height, it shuts down and won't let anymore in."

Tutela initially tried to allow for more saltwater inflow by placing a one-inch wedge in the existing tide gates, but the Army Corps ruled that self-regulating gates were more appropriate.

The tide gates are located at the culvert where Summer Street and Elm Street meet.

a great deal of paperwork for the Town Clerk's office. Town Finance Director Michael Buckley estimated the restructuring would result in an additional $6,000 of revenue. Selectmen who supported the measure (Michael Sullivan, Merle Brown and Ronnie McMorris) pointed to other towns that charge far higher fees than Cohasset for beach and transfer station access.

But Selectman Fred Koed, the lone selectman to vote against the measure, says that offering only an all-facilities sticker goes too far. "We should be trying to recover what it takes to maintain the beach parking lot, but we shouldn't be trying to pay the dump fees with it," he said of the beach sticker.

"To me it doesn't make sense," Koed added. "You do create some efficiency (by limiting paperwork), but you're negating the final concept that user fees should pay for what their going to. This takes the fact that they're both stickers on a car and it assumes they're related, but they're not. They're two different stickers: one for the beach, one for the dump."

Koed also argued that nearby towns may have higher sticker fees for beach parking, but in most of those towns, the revenue was also needed to care for the beach. In Cohasset, he said, because the beach is owned and maintained by a private, non-profit company, the sticker fee only needs to pay for the maintenance of the parking lot. "In this type of tight budget, we need to be careful that user fees are going towards what they're charged against," he said.

Selectmen Merle Brown disagreed with Koed's point that maintenance was limited to care of the parking lot. "We don't own the beach, but we do things for them," he said. "We empty their trash, and when the sand blows off the beach, we put it back."

Brown, who is also a member of the Recycling Committee, said he welcomed the move to a single sticker. "The whole intent was to originally have one sticker, in my mind, so that people didn't have to plaster stickers all over their cars," he said. "I think people will realize it's not that big a deal when they see the sticker prices in other towns."

Town Clerk Marion Douglas said in neighboring Scituate, beach stickers were $20 and RTF stickers were $75. She said the sticker restructuring would indeed save paperwork, but the main goal of the change was "to have an affordable RTF sticker for all residents." She noted that the RTF sticker, with the help of the pay-as-you-throw program, had been reduced from $100 in 2000 to $35 last year.

Douglas said if more residents would start recycling at the transfer station, the cost of the all-facilities sticker would go down again next year. Both she and Brown wanted to price the sticker at $25 this year, but Town Finance Director Michael Buckley said that was too low.

Buckley has estimated that only half of those residents who bought beach stickers last year will buy all-facilities stickers this year. Using those figures, and assuming that all residents who bought all-facilities stickers last year will buy them again, he calculated that revenue from sticker fees will jump from about $83,000 to $89,000.

The increase in revenue will be borne by the 760 all-facilities stickers which will be purchased in place of beach stickers. Revenue from that group will jump from $9,400 to more than $20,000, despite the 50 percent drop in stickers issued. Meanwhile, revenue from the group of more than 2,600 all-facilities stickers purchased last year will fall from $73,500 to $68,500, Buckley estimates.

Koed says that a $5 reduction in the all-facilities sticker does not make up for the $23 increase for hundreds of residents who once bought beach stickers for cars they would never think of taking to the Recycling Transfer Station. He recalled a mother who called him saying that her two teenaged boys would have to pay 6 times as much as last year (from $10 then up to $60 now) to take their "clunker cars" to the beach. "It's a big increase without adequate justification," he said.

But Town Manager Haddad defended the fee increase. "The beach sticker sales are not meant to offset the cost of the taking care of the beach parking lot," he said. "It's revenue for the town, especially in these tough times." Haddad did not know the cost of the cleaning the beach parking lot but said the cost of operating the RTF was $400,000 a year.

All-facilities stickers will be on sale in June during normal business hours at Town Hall and at the DPW garage on weekends, starting June 1, from 7:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., and Monday to Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m..

Sign bylaw is under review

policy) has never been written anywhere and it's never been challenged, so use your conscience about when to post your signs."

Egan said he was unsure how he would regulate political signs if he went strictly by the letter of the town sign bylaw, which classifies signs by their different purposes. "I don't know where it would fit in," he said.

Koed said the fact that the sign bylaw was "vague enough to require the interpretation of the building inspector" regarding political signs meant it needed to be changed. He also said the town's unwritten and no longer enforced policy regarding how long signs could be posted would need to be looked at, especially because it has been questioned during political campaigns that include both a primary and a general election.

Koed, who has been involved in many political campaigns in nearby towns, said most communities on the South Shore did specifically regulate political signs. He recalled a bylaw in Scituate years ago, where political signs were allowed only on a wheeled vehicle, driving some residents to litter their lawns with individual car wheels.

Koed hopes that DeRensis will complete his review in time for the bylaw to be changed, if necessary, at the next Town Meeting. It is unclear what would happen if any proposed changes were defeated.

Koed said, ultimately, the town may have no say about political signs. "Somebody could probably take political signage all the way to the Supreme Court and win. But there's a legal argument that if all the regulations for signs are the same, then we have something to stand on."

Cohasset blood drive is June 4

"First time donors are urgently needed to replace donors who have moved away or become ineligible to donate."

— Cathy Pray, director

The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive for Wednesday, June 4 at St. Anthony Parish Center at the corner of South Main and Summer streets from 1:30-7:30 p.m. As in the past, baby-sitting will be provided from 3-5 p.m. Ample parking is available.

The American Red Cross is asking all eligible blood donors in the Cohasset area to give blood when the bloodmobile comes to Cohasset. According to Cathy Pray, Director, "Only five out of every 100 people give blood, and the number of new donors decreased dramatically last year. First time donors are urgently needed to replace donors who have moved away or become ineligible to donate."

The best way to give blood for the first time is to come with a friend who is experienced in the donation process. New donors usually find the procedure easy and painless and most come back regularly to donate. "The biggest obstacle seems to be overcoming that initial fear," said Pray. "That's why we're counting on our regular donors to help by bringing a friend to this blood drive." The Red Cross area community of which Cohasset is a part requires over 1,600 pints of blood per day to meet usual demand for blood and blood products. It is a challenge to collect enough blood to meet the needs of hospital patients year round. Every blood donation is an opportunity to help an accident victim, a surgical patient, or a child battling leukemia, to name a few.

Most people can give blood through the American Red Cross. Potential donors must be at least 17 years of age, in good health and weigh more than 110 pounds. In most cases, donors may give if they are on medication, but should know the names of these medications.

The Red Cross always counts on a good turnout when it visits Cohasset so please respond, if possible, when a volunteer from one of the church, civic, corporate or social organizations calls. New donors are welcome and especially needed. To register and make an appointment for donating at a specific time or if you have any questions, please call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290. You can also call the Red Cross at 1-800-448-3543.

Selectmen unsure if village is June 3 topic

Town Manager Mark Haddad is not sure whether selectmen will meet with representatives from the Waterfield Design Group to decide on the village revitalization at their next meeting on June 3.

Haddad said Waterfield is completing the design for burying or possibly moving utility wires, but the group still has a meeting with Mass Electric this Friday afternoon.

Pending the outcome of that meeting, Waterfield may not be able to finish the plans in time for the selectmen's meeting on Tuesday. Haddad said he may not know until Monday whether Waterfield will be on the upcoming agenda.

uled, the bands played and flags waved. The numbers that cheered along the route multiplied at Veterans Park in the harbor just before noon for the culmination of the annual Memorial Day exercises including hearing this year's speaker-of-the-day, Maj. Philip J. Mahoney, US Marine Corps (ret.).

Mahoney told of his days as a newly commissioned lieutenant and how his "love affair" with Cohasset's Memorial Day took root 12 years ago.

"As he stood in front of me almost at attention in his boot camp issue uniform, I saw the pride of an old Marine while he passed the torch to a new generation," Mahoney recalled about Louis Bailey, a WWII veteran. "Louis and his counterparts had fought their way across the Pacific in some of the most bitter campaigns in Marine Corps history. They were the backbone of the Corps' reputation, true warriors who had earned hero status.

"Yet, here he was talking to me as if I were the hero — calling me 'Sir' and wishing me well at every turn."

Mahoney said Bailey's reaction to him on that Memorial Day back in 1991 left a lasting impression. He realized that Bailey and those like him returned home from battlefields around the world, and started families and ran businesses. They did not brag or have a false sense of entitlement.

Mahoney said he realized there were more Louis Baileys in the crowd — more whose underlying theme was one of "duty, honor, sacrifice."

"The list of Cohasset veterans and their achievements is endless," Mahoney said. "As I marveled at their quality of their service both in and out of uniform, I began to see the connection to the men and women of the current military — years earlier these veterans were the young privates, sergeants and lieutenants who shaped the military."

That day he was also deeply touched by the names of fallen soldiers on the town's honor roll. He realized he stood among the finest Cohasset had to offer.

"I walked away from that first Memorial Day a better man and a better Marine," he said. "I now understood the veteran …the commitment, attention to duty, and most importantly the sacrifice."

That's a message, which Vietnam veteran John Morgan holds deep in his heart. Morgan who is now a platoon sergeant with Hingham's 1058th Transportation Company, which is deployed in Iraq, thinks about his soldiers every day. While he marched in the rain along with dozens of other veterans on Monday, he held a reminder of those fighting men and women.

In his hands, he proudly clutched 23 dog tags — one from each member of his platoon. Due to medical issues, Morgan can't be with his soldiers, except in spirit.

"They day they left, I nearly lost it," he said about the emotion welling up inside when the 1058th was deployed. Above all he wants his soldiers to return home safely.

"They're my kids and I trained them well," Morgan said.

Wigmore, the American Legion Post Commander, also asked for a moment of silence for the Cohasset veterans who had died since Memorial Day 2002. They include Ralph T. Sutherland, Benjamin F. Curley, Jr., Joseph L. Kane, Patrick J. Doonan, James P. Patterson, John J. White and Frederick Piepenbrink. Gold Star Mother Mary Reardon also passed away, Wigmore said.

VFW Post Commander Ralph Perroncello, who led the parade riding in an Army jeep, was also pleased with the turnout.

"It says a lot," he said.

US, Canada and the UK — believes strongly in having a pet because it can help the residents interact and can even provide positive health effects, such as lowering blood pressure.

But it wasn't until Justine Thurston of Hingham, who provided a program on greyhounds at the Cohasset Sunrise earlier this spring, that the stage was set for Brian's arrival. In other words, Sunrise's need for a dog and Thurston's visit came at the perfect time.

Thurston, who is a volunteer with Greyhound Pets of America that has a kennel in Middleboro, can be very persuasive about how lovable and adaptable adopted greyhounds can be.

"She hand picked Brian for us and brought him over," Baxter recalled.

Actually it was a toss up between Brian and Trudy, another greyhound. Thurston brought them both over. But Brian felt right at home almost immediately and followed a resident into her room.

"He had a ball," Thurston recalled. Brian, who had never seen stairs before, even provided a little comic relief when he tried to negotiate the spiral staircase for the very first time.

"Now he's fine with stairs," Baxter says. There was also a problem in the beginning with getting Brian housebroken. Greyhounds are kept in cages when not racing. They won't go to the bathroom in their cage, but will when let out. So Brian was initially confused about all the freedom. However, he is a smart dog, Baxter says, and caught on quickly.

Baxter says Brian's size has turned out to be a plus. (He's a big dog and weighs about 75 pounds). The residents don't have to bend down to pet him, which is especially nice for those in wheelchairs.

Visiting children also love Brian. Residents will often say to the youngsters, "let's go find Brian," Baxter says.

"This dog is precious," she says. "You just can't help to like him."

Brian, who is brindled or mixed in color, came with a list of instructions in the form of a letter of introduction for the staff members to refer to if need be. They include a friendly reminder, written in the first person from Brian's perspective, to keep Brian on a leash when outside because as a "sight-hound racing dog" the big world looks very interesting. No one wants Brian to run off into the street and get hurt.

Thurston says greyhounds are docile, quiet "couch potatoes" that like to run. Sunrise has posted a sign at the front door asking that Brian not be let outside by accident.

Residents have also been asked not to slip Brian the occasional chocolate, so his tummy won't get upset.

Thurston is confident Brian has found a place to call home.

"He's very much a caring dog and will give a lot of comfort," Thurston says.

For more about Greyhound Pets of America, call Thurston at 781-749-4620.

Seniors write the book on Osgood first-graders

Osgood students illustrate stories

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

"I've really enjoyed my experience here. There's just a tremendous amount of excitement."
— Nancy Hanson, CHS English teacher

Thanks to a project put together by Cohasset High School English teacher Nancy Hanson, first-graders at the Osgood School will never forget the Class of 2003.

Hanson, who taught every senior at some point this school year, made sure her soon-to-be-departing students left a good impression on their younger counterparts, who have only just begun their academic careers. She arranged for each of her 79 seniors to write a children's story for a first-grader.

"I always had the desire to have my students write stories," said Hanson, who started the project while at Archbishop Williams School in Braintree, where she taught for 15 years before coming to Cohasset two years ago. "I wanted them to have an audience."

The seniors personalized their stories, making individual first-graders the heroes of their tales after getting back questionnaires listing each child's favorite things.

On Thursday, about 20 of Hanson's seniors visited the Osgood School, along with Hanson, teacher's aide Ellen Kane and town children's librarian Sharon Moody, to present the children's books to teacher Jared Alves' first grade class.

The books had already been written and bound by the seniors, complete with "about the author" pages and computer-designed covers. The first-graders then put on the finishing touches by adding illustrations to each page as the seniors read to them.

It was one of four journeys to Osgood School for Hanson this school year, as her students brought books to four of the six first grade classes. "I've really enjoyed my experience here," she said. "There's just a tremendous amount of excitement."

Hanson brought her students to teacher Jennifer Thorell's first-graders on Friday and to teacher Allison Sullivan's class this Wednesday. All four first grade teachers involved in the project also received personalized books. Teacher Cynthia Hurley, whose class received books from one of Hanson's classes earlier in the year, received her book from a former student, senior Meredith Bixby.

Hanson's best friend, who taught first grade at the St. Francis Elementary School in Braintree, used to have her students write stories back to Hanson's Archbishop Williams students. Hanson said she wanted to take the project in that direction in Cohasset, too. "We just didn't have time this year," she said. "But the first grade teachers hope to be able to build on this."

Before the seniors wrote the books, Moody, who was a kindergarten teacher in Cohasset for 17 years, visited Hanson's class and lectured her students about what makes a good children's story. "I talked to them about the elements of picture book style, and how to write folk and fairy tales," she said. "I also had more than 100 books for them to look at for different styles."

Senior Sarah Dennis was able to take advantage of that lecture, modeling her book for first-grader Phoebe Knox on another story she had read. The story, entitled "If You Give a Bunny a Gummy Bear," was a hit with Phoebe.

"I was able to incorporate all her favorite things, like Monopoly and Shrek and her favorite animal," said Dennis. "It was fun. It was different, because we've been doing all this academic stuff, so it was a break. It was awesome."

Senior Ben Lynner used the fact that his partner, first-grader Chris Hagerty, was a huge baseball fan to write a story about Chris pitching a no-hitter for the Red Sox. Lynner said watching Chris illustrate his book was rewarding. "It was awesome to see him interact and be so happy to be a part of something," he said.

Senior Evan Pestone was equally pleased with the project.

CHS senior Maura McKenney, right, watches as first-grader Carly Kinscherf illustrates the book she wrote for her.

Teacher Cynthia Hurley, whose class received books from one of Hanson's classes earlier in the year, receives her book from a former student, senior Meredith Bixby.

"It's was really nice to get out of school and work with the kids on a different level," he said. "I felt like the kids really looked up to us a lot."

Alves said the project taught his first-graders reading, language and social skills and also gave them a sense of accomplishment. "There just so engaged, I don't know what to do with myself," he said as he scanned his classroom on Thursday. "I'm impressed. This is such a wonderful project."

Alves said other first-grade teachers reported similar results. "Every teacher said as soon as they got together, you could hear a pin drop in the room because they were so engaged," he said.

Moody said the project gave closure to the seniors, and to her as well, because she taught some of them in her early years as a kindergarten teacher. "They didn't go to this school, because it's brand new, but it's still coming back to their roots. It's nostalgic for them," she said.

Moody said the books would be cherished by the first-graders for years to come. "This is going to be something that stays with them forever," she said. "It's going to be something they read to their parents, grandparents, aunts, uncles, all their relatives. It may not even come off the mantle until they get married and leave home, so it's definitely an air loom."

Salt marsh at World's End is brought back to life

Restoration praised at recent dedication

A salt marsh farmed for salt meadow grass in colonial times and later converted to a freshwater hayfield is having a comeback as a result of a restoration project completed this month by The Trustees of Reservations. Wetlands restoration advocates gathered last week to dedicate the Damde Meadows Salt Marsh Restoration Project at World's End Reservation, owned by the non-profit conservation organization.

"With the help of our conservation partners, we've turned the clock back some 300 years to a time when tidal waters sustained a vibrant New England salt marsh at World's End," said Andy Kendall, Executive Director of The Trustees of Reservations. "In the years to come, Damde Meadows will be a haven for wildlife and a wonderful educational resource for our visitors. The project highlights the power and synergy that result from collaboration among government agencies, conservation organizations, and corporate partners. Together, we're going to conserve the best of the Massachusetts landscape for future generations to enjoy."

State Secretary of Environmental Affairs Ellen Roy Herzfelder of Cohasset, second from left, joins federal, state and local supporters of the Damde Meadows salt marsh restoration project, recently dedicated at World End's in Hingham. The Trustees of Reservations sponsored the project to restore 18 acres of salt marsh.

Damde Meadows originally was a salt marsh extending east-west from Hingham Harbor to the Weir River, separating Cushing's Neck from Planter's Hill and World's End. In the 1600s, settlers constructed two earthen and stone dams, one at the Weir River side and one at Martin's Cove, in order to "reclaim ... the 'Damde Meddowes' ... from the sea".

The $185,500 project involved installing two 4-foot by 8-foot concrete box culverts, sized to approximate unrestricted, natural tidal flow. The culverts replaced a failing drainpipe that extended below the two dikes and which connected Damde Meadows with Martin's Cove. One of these dikes was constructed in the 1880's to improve public access to the World's End peninsula in Hingham Bay, part of Frederick Law Olmsted's design for the World's End landscape.

"With the help of our conservation partners, we've turned the clock back some 300 years to a time when tidal waters sustained a vibrant New England salt marsh at World's End."

— Andy Kendall, Trustees of Reservations

The two new culverts are designed to allow enough water to flood the approximately 18-acre site and restore the salt marsh, while allowing the large ponded area to drain at low tide. Ecologists predict that most of the area will be recolonized by salt marsh vegetation. The higher tides accommodated by the new culverts will reach deep into the marsh, stressing and eventually killing off much of the invasive Phragmites australis (common reed). Areas now dominated by Phragmites are expected to gradually develop into a high marsh plant community, dominated by spike grass, black grass, and salt hay.

Secretary of Environmental Affairs Ellen Roy Herzfelder praised The Trustees for choosing to restore the salt marsh. "Caring for our wetlands is critical to the environmental and economic health of the coastal communities that all New Englanders treasure. By joining forces with our many public and private partners, as we have done for the Damde Meadows Salt Marsh Restoration Project, we can restore a significant part of our wetland heritage and maintain it for future generations."

A diverse array of local, state, federal, and private partners carried the project through the various stages of site evaluation, project design, permitting, and construction. The Trustees sponsored and managed the project, and provided part of the funding. The USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service provided planning, design and oversight, as well as financial assistance through the Wetlands Reserve Program. The Corporate Wetlands Restoration Partnership played a key role in fulfilling a cost-share requirement for one of the federal grants, through the donation of technical services and funds by ENSR International and New England Development. provided ongoing technical input. The Gulf of Maine Council, Fish America Foundation, and the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation all provided project funding through NOAA (National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration) partnership grants. Northern Construction Services, from Weymouth, served as the contractor for the project construction.

Speaking at the event, Garry Hollands of ENSR International, in Westford, observed that the Corporate Wetlands Restoration Partnership (CWRP) creates an opportunity for the private sector, the government regulatory sector, and environmental organizations to work together for a common cause, breaking down the "good guy — bad guy" paradigm. "The CWRP is an effective vehicle to rally society's resources to restore wetlands."

The Damde Meadows restoration provides The Trustees with an exciting opportunity to involve students in learning about salt marsh ecosystems. Students from Curry College in Milton have already assessed the initial site conditions. The Trustees will continue to involve high school and college students in the monitoring of the wetland as tidal flow gradually restores the area to its natural condition. The staff will also work with local teachers to use Damde Meadows for field studies. These educational goals stem from the organization's belief that re-connecting people to the land is one of the most effective ways to foster the protection of the Massachusetts landscape.

Habitat application meetings set for June 7 at St. Stephen's

South Shore Habitat for Humanity is soliciting applications from families wishing to purchase an existing Habitat condominium residence at 43 Elm St., Cohasset. It is the first floor unit of a two-unit condo and has three bedrooms. South Shore Habitat has re-purchased this unit from the previous Habitat homeowner and will sell it to a family in need.

Qualified families who can demonstrate a severe housing need, whose income is within Habitat guidelines and who are financially qualified are encouraged to apply to purchase the home. Families will be chosen without respect to age, gender, sexual preference, disability, race, religion or national origin. There is no residency restriction for this project.

The selected family will purchase this condo at Habitat's cost and will receive 20-year, zero-interest financing by Habitat. This unit is priced at $69,500.

The selected family will purchase this condo at Habitat's cost and will receive 20-year, zero-interest financing by Habitat. This unit is priced at $69,500. The Habitat mortgage principal payment will be about $290 per month. The homeowners will also be responsible for paying property taxes, insurance and for home upkeep. South Shore Habitat will use the principal payments to finance future home construction or renovations for other families with housing needs in the South Shore area. The new homeowners must be willing to run the condo association in partnership with the owners of the second unit.

The selected family must also invest "sweat equity" time with Habitat. Because this condo unit is in fine condition, sweat equity work will be required at other Habitat sites throughout the South Shore. Construction work is being done in Marshfield, Easton, and Norwell.

The required 500 sweat equity hours can be accumulated by working along with other volunteers on construction, landscaping, site clean-up, fundraising and many other tasks. Sweat equity hours can be done by any family member; no construction skills are necessary. Most construction work takes place on Saturdays.

Prospective homeowners will be required to attend one informational meeting to learn about the project. Application forms are only available at these meetings. Two meetings have been scheduled as follows:

St. Stephens Church, 16 Highland Ave., Cohasset on * Saturday, June 7 from 10a.m.-noon and 7:30-9 p.m. Child care will be provided at both meetings.

All candidates should meet the following annual gross family income guidelines. Extenuating circumstances will be considered.

$23,000 - $33,000
Family of 4
$23,000 - $35,000
Family of 5
$23,000 - $37,000
Family of 6 or more
$23,000 - $39,000

The deadline for submission of applications will be June 23.

What's up at CSC this year

By Ann Musto
and Sandy Crough
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The beauty of one-design sailing is that our older boats, if taken care of and sailed well, are very good options for the club to be able to get more sailors out on the water.

As the summer sailing season starts to shape up, there are some important changes and considerations for past team members, as well as for those students who have completed their fourth year of instruction.

The Club is happy to report that our coach, Pat Rynne, will be returning to the Sailing Club again this summer. Pat is currently a sophomore at Brown University and an integral part of the Brown Sailing Team. He has a long and impressive background in Massachusetts Bay Junior Racing, having started out at the Scituate Yacht Club and then went on to help establish a sailing team, and to excel at St. Sebastian High School. He has been with CSC for three years and has been the motivating factor in establishing a true racing program.

The Board of Trustees at the club has backed the development of this arm of the instructional program and has agreed to purchase three more new 420 racing boats which brings our total to six new boats, including three sailed last summer; and two older 420 boats for training — and can also be sailed in a regatta! The beauty of one-design sailing is that our older boats, if taken care of and sailed well, are very good options for the club to be able to get more sailors out on the water.

Because of the high expense in providing these boats, we have added $30 onto the usual instructional fee for sailing, bringing the CSC Race Team member fee to $200 plus the requirement of a family membership. This fee is levied on all 420 sailors, new and old, top sailors as well as beginners. With the realizations that the team members will practice and race every afternoon from 1 p.m. on till the end of the practice, this fee is minimal. Participation at regattas will be decided by the coach and dependent upon consistent participation, ability and individual development.

We look forward to a great summer and hope to see the club represented throughout Mass Bay at many junior regattas. Pat and the CSC Board anticipate an excellent season and hope to have our own first Annual CSC Regatta!

Student coastal center to open Friday, June 20

Roy Herzfelder is guest speaker

The Center for Student Coastal Research's core educational mission is to provide opportunities for high school students to study local watershed issues.

The Center for Student Coastal Research announces Ellen Roy Herzfelder, the state Secretary for the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, will provide the keynote address at ceremonies marking the Center's official opening from 5-7 p.m., Friday, June 20. The Center for Student Coastal Research (CSCR) will celebrate the establishment of a harborfront laboratory and classroom facility dedicated to supporting coastal research projects of importance to Cohasset and surrounding communities in the South Coastal Watershed.

CSCR's core educational mission is to provide opportunities for high school students to study local watershed issues. CSCR is dedicated to assisting students to complete research projects that meet the rigors of professional scientific review; CSCR students, therefore, serve community interests and needs. CSCR is equally dedicated to providing younger students with programs designed to engage them in the exploration of the coastal environment and to assist them in developing their skills as young scientists.

The opening of CSCR's doors will mark the successful work of numerous volunteers who labored to rehabilitate a long abandoned, but historic town landmark, the Captain Aubrey Crocker home, better known locally as the Hagerty building. Though still a work in progress, the Center will open its doors this summer to dozens of young scientists enrolled in its Seaside Adventures program and a select group of high school students focused on research projects in Cohasset Harbor, Little Harbor, Bassings Beach, and the Gulf River.

CSCR will also be celebrating area artists who have leased studios in the building as part of a collaborative agreement between the Center and the South Shore Art Center.

A sticky situation

We'll admit in the overall scheme of things $30 is not a big price to pay for an "all-facilities" sticker. It's far less than a dinner out at Atlantica, Bernard's or the Red Lion Inn. It's less than filling an SUV with premium gasoline and adds up to about 20 medium cups of coffee at Dunkin' Donuts.

But like anything else in life, it's often the principle rather than the actual price tag that gets people riled.

When the cost of going to the beach jumps 400 percent in a single year, it's bound to raise a few eyebrows.

Residents realize times are tough and the town is trying to find money and savings wherever it can.

The Board of Selectmen sometimes has to make difficult, and at times, unpopular decisions. This time the board voted to raise sticker fees that will generate some badly needed revenue and reduce paperwork at the Town Clerk's office.

That being said, though, beach stickers were one of the few bargains left in a town which has some of the highest property taxes in the state. And "fee" is really just another word for taxes. There was something a little quaint and almost old-fashioned about being able to buy a beach sticker for only $7 ($3 for each additional vehicle). It was almost like parking at our beautiful Sandy Beach for free.

But before you get ready to dial Town Hall, think about whether $30 is too much to pay. It's important to point out the "all-facilities sticker" that includes the RTF is a bargain for your "dump car" because RTF stickers cost $35 last year.

If you still don't like paying the $30 ($20 for a second vehicle) for the "all-facilities" sticker then call your individual selectmen and let them know. That's your right.

Senior rides at risk

TO THE EDITOR:

Transportation has become such a vital requirement for seniors that the Cohasset Elder Affairs has a separate phone number—781-383-0220—to accommodate this need. Here is what they do:

- Today is Thursday and a wheelchair-bound senior needs the center's medical van to transport her for a 9:30 a.m. appointment to a Weymouth's doctor's office; after which, she will be lifted to the Stetson Building for some blood work.
- Because the medical van is tied up, another senior will be transported using the Medical Assistance Program (MAP) to a daily appointment for radiation treatment at Crown Colony in Quincy.
- Two other seniors will ride into Boston using the Medical Transportation to Boston Program (MTB-5). Fortunately, both have 10 a.m. and 10:15 a.m. appointments at Massachusetts General Hospital.
- At 9:30, Cohasset seniors will take the center's regular van "around town." One may go to the library to return and take out books, one has business at town hall, a couple may have coffee and sweets at French Memories, while another heads for the post office. Food shopping trips to Stop & Shop and Shaw's Supermarkets are made on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.
- After these seniors are returned home, the van will pick up other seniors for the nutritious lunch program at the center held on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays. Today, they will be entertained after lunch by the Derby Academy Choral Group.
- Another independent senior gentleman has procured a ride to the Hingham-Boston ferry and public transportation for an appointment at the V.A. Hospital but doesn't have a ride back from the Hingham Shipyard. A volunteer is recruited to meet the gentleman and take him to his Cohasset home at 3 p.m.

Regrettably, with the economic recession, the MTB-5 Program will die at fiscal year ending June 30 and the MAP Program may have a similar demise on Sept. 30. Cohasset seniors are fortunate to retain local transportation through the Cohasset Elder Affairs office.

The transportation totals for the period July 1 through May 30 are 1,413 rides to socials, luncheons, events, etc. and 478 for medical services.

Thank you for all the Relay support

TO THE EDITOR:

On May 16th and 17th the annual Relay For Life was held at Cohasset High School. Thanks to the efforts of many it was a huge success. We raised more than $113,000, had 650 walkers and 50 survivors participate. I would like to thank all those who made it possible. First I would like to thank Mary Shepherd from the American Cancer Society and all the members of the RFL committee : Anna Mary Stewart, Karen Burns, Charlie Towers, Victor Vanderlugt, Raquel Delgado, Gordon Berher, Jeff Mushin, Ross Lieb-Lappen, Martha Henderson, Emily Dean, and Jacqui Vitello. I would also like to thank a few unofficial members, Kelly Gaumer, Lyn Previte, and Jen Piepenbrink. Thank you to all the Clergy members who came out in support of the Relay: the Reverend Gary Ritts, the Reverend Beth Wheatly-Tyson, and Father John Mulvehill. Also to state Rep. Garret Bradley and state Rep. Frank Hynes. Thank you to all the Team Captains who create the teams and team spirit. I would like to thank our sponsors: Community Newspaper Company, Pilgrim Co-operative Bank, Goodwin Graphics, The Cohasset Rotary, Neil J Murphy Assoc. Inc., and The Livingstone Company. Thank you to The South Shore Community Center and The Second Congregational Church for generously donating their space for all our committee meetings.

The Taste of The Relay was delicious and enjoyed by all. Thank you to The Red Parrot, The Borrowed Butler, Atlantica, Schooners, Windsor Tea Shop, MacKenzies, French Memories, Bare Cove Gourmet and Maggie's Corner Bakery. We had a large number of donations from local businesses and individuals that most certainly deserve a special thank you. They are the Adrian Morris Salon, Brewed Awakenings, Coca Cola, Cohasset Rotary, Crow Point Pizza, DiNero's, Eastern Mountain Sports, Hair Imports, Hingham Music, H P Hood, Nona's, Papa Gino's, Pro Sports, Ray Papile, Really Great Pizza, The Red Lion Inn, Shaws, South Shore Music Circus, Bernard's, Cohasset Pizza House, The Craft Factory, Dunkin' Donuts, Atlantic Bagel, Elizabeth Kissick, Julian Crane Co., Manganaro Northeast, Lily Sestito, David Ingber, Bob Levy, Jack DeLorenzo, and Amy and Glenn Davis.

Without the help of all these people and Companies the Relay would not have been the success that it was. Lastly and most importantly, I would like to thank all the walkers who came out in the cold to walk and raised the money that is so important in the fight against cancer.

Saving James Island from development

In its current natural state with classic Cohasset outcroppings and ledges of stone, James Island is the linchpin of scenic and wildlife beauty in Upper Little Harbor.

The James Island Preservation Alliance has recently been organized by a group of residents in the Little Harbor area of Cohasset. The purpose of the Alliance is to acquire James Island, a peninsula located in the middle of Upper Little Harbor for perpetual conservation status as the much-preferred alternative to commercialization of this Cohasset coastal treasure. The owners of this peninsula property have initiated a subdivision approval process with the town for commercialization of the acreage into house lots.

Members of the Alliance have grave concerns that commercialization would have a dramatic, adverse, ecological and environmental impact on the already non-conforming waters of the protected Harbor, including destruction of wildlife, habitat, and the loss of resident and migratory birds, such as swans, herons, egrets, ducks and the like.

In its current natural state with classic Cohasset outcroppings and ledges of stone, James Island is the linchpin of scenic and wildlife beauty in Upper Little Harbor. Given the protected tidal waters and its close proximity to the ocean, the area is in the migratory flyover and many hundreds of winged visitors rest in the harbor each season.

The Cohasset Conservation Trust has joined with the Alliance, including a financial pledge from its limited funds, in support of the preservation alternative. Additionally, the Boston office of the National Trust for Public Lands has also joined with the Alliance, bringing experience and skills to help structure a transaction that would be a win-win for the Alliance, for Cohasset, and for the current owners of James Island, who have a family tradition of concern for the coastal environment and its wildlife.

From its founding families and the Cohasset Conservation Trust, the James Island Preservation Alliance has already, in just a few weeks, received pledges for more than 50 percent of the expected acquisition cost, and is initiating fundraising from other concerned townspeople and organizations, the generosity of whom can be counted on for such a laudable and essential endeavor. The total acquisition cost is anticipated to be in excess of $1.5 million for the acreage involved.

This is a press release from the James Island Preservation Alliance. For more information, contact R.E. Brooks at 781-383-8823.

Memorial Day in Cohasset

The following is the complete text of Maj. Philip J. Mahoney's Memorial Day speech.

Commander Wigmore, Commander Parencello, Fellow Veterans, Cohasset Residents, Family and Friends:

It is with great pleasure that I join you on a day like this, in a town like this. My love affair with Cohasset's Memorial Day began 12 years ago in 1991 when a newly commissioned "Boot" Lieutenant by the name of Phil Mahoney followed the orders of his older brothers and reported for parade duty at the Mealy Legion Post.

Armed with a diploma from Officers' Candidates School, a diploma from college, and two shiny "butter bars" on my uniform, I was your typical young officer- polished and confident on the outside, cautious and terribly nervous on the inside. I had studied the tactics and the training manuals, but the human element of leadership could not be learned from the textbooks. I needed a big picture view of the what the military was all about and who the men and women were who filled its ranks. With my first command only months away, my time was short. So I came to the Legion that Memorial Day with several questions and I was looking for help.

My learning process began right away as the first group of Cohasset veterans began to arrive at the Legion. Dressed in the torn remains of old uniforms with non-regulation hair, beards, beer bellies, and sneakers instead of boots, this contingent looked more like a group of "trick-or-treaters" on Halloween than a military outfit. However, beneath the rag-tag appearance was a wealth of knowledge born in the boot camps and battlefields of World War II, Korea, Vietnam, Grenada, Panama, and the Persian Gulf. Their past experiences would be my guide and would help prepare me for the challenges that lay ahead.

The school bell rang and class began when I was introduced to Louis Bailey, a World War II Marine and decorated veteran of Okinawa. As he stood in front of me almost at attention in his boot camp-issue uniform, I saw the pride of an old Marine while he passed the torch to a new generation. Louis and his counterparts had fought their way across the Pacific in some of the most bitter campaigns in Marine Corps history. They were the backbone of the Corps' reputation, true warriors who had earned hero status. Yet, here he was talking to me as if I were the hero, calling me "Sir" and wishing me well at every turn.

I never forgot Louis Bailey's reaction that Memorial Day and it left a lasting impression. He was an accomplished man whose sacrifice, dedication, and service extended beyond the Marine Corps when he returned home to start a family and run a successful business. He had contributed a great deal to his country, his community, and his family, but you would never hear him talk about it. There was no bragging or false sense of entitlement involved with Louis Bailey. He was just a modest, hard working man.

As I continued to meet more of Cohasset's veterans, it struck me that there was more than one Louis Bailey in the crowd. In fact, each individual, although coming from different backgrounds, had an underlying theme very similar to Louis'— one of duty, commitment, and sacrifice.

There was Eddie Curran, a Marine veteran and career electrician who always found time to coach and support local athletics. He was one of my first youth hockey coaches and definitely the first who, after seeing my inability to stay out of the penalty box, advised me not to quit my day job. Eddie also sent three of his sons into the military- Timmy, Danny, and Brian, where they all served their country in the Persian Gulf.

There was Bob Jackson, Navy veteran, Cohasset Police Chief, and longtime law enforcement official who logged over 30 years of naval service, held numerous command billets, and retired with the rank of Captain.

There was Matt Marr and John Ketcham, both Army veterans, both decorated in combat, both firefighters, and both private businessmen.

No yardstick could measure the magnitude of their contributions to our everyday life. They were, and will always be, Cohasset's greatest citizens.

This list of Cohasset veterans and their achievements is endless. As I marveled at the quality of their service both in and out of uniform, I began to see their connection to the men and women of the current military. Years earlier, these veterans were the young Privates, Sergeants, and Lieutenants who shaped the military. A look at their thoughts and motivations would give me an idea of what to expect myself. My day of learning was really starting to pay off.

I went through the paces for the rest of the day more sure of myself and confident that I could be a successful Marine Officer. The town of Cohasset had turned out in impressive numbers at every cemetery stop and was now lining the parade route from the Common to the harbor. The show of support was tremendous as the veterans marched with pride, out of step, into this very spot — Cohasset's Veteran's Memorial.

What happened next was a moment that changed my life forever. I thought about it everyday for the 11 years that I wore the country's uniform and I continue to reference it today. It was a revelation of the kind that happens when skies open up, the oceans part, and a brilliant ray of light beams down to earth. In front of Phil Mahoney, the confused Second Lieutenant, lay the secret to it all.

This secret was contained in the names that lined the town's war memorial — the names of Cohasset's fallen heroes. Daley, Gonsalves, Mealy, Sidney, Williams, Buffum, Gleason, Jason, Johnson, Long, Parker, Studley, Todd, Strout, Albiani, Cogill, Keating, Laidlaw, Lyon, Maree, Reardon, and Simeone. With each name that I read, the point was made clearer and the lesson more important.

I now stood in the midst of the finest Cohasset had to offer. These veterans epitomized sacrifice and service. They gave their lives to protect and preserve our way of life and our national interests. To be mentioned in the same breath was flattering beyond belief. No yardstick could measure the magnitude of their contributions to our everyday life. They were, and will always be, Cohasset's greatest citizens.

I walked away from that first Memorial Day a better man and a better Marine. I now understood the veteran and the things that made him so special- the commitment, the attention to duty, and most importantly, the sacrifice. To serve with young men and women cut from that mold would be an honor and I challenge I would not take lightly.

Cohasset's veterans had helped set the standard and it was up to me to carry on that fine tradition. They served with distinction and some gave their lives, the rest returned to continue the mission with faithful work on behalf of their communities and their families. Ladies and gentlemen, that is what life is all about.

It is fitting that we discuss the veteran at a time like this. The latest generation of service men and women are presently in harms way fighting the nation's battles. Belleau Wood, Iwo Jima, Chosin, and Khe Sanh have been replaced by Kabul, Basra, Nasiriya, and Baghdad. Our military has performed brilliantly and they deserve our unwavering support.

I disagree with the views of some academics who think that today's military is not an accurate reflection of society. Now serving on the battlefield's of Afghanistan and Iraq are tomorrow's parents, teachers, lawyers, construction workers, and business people. Just ask Louis Bailey and the rest of the Cohasset veterans. They answered the call overseas and at home- they served and they sacrificed. And for that, we honor them.

I am proud to be an American, proud to be a United States Marine, and especially proud to be a Cohasset veteran. Happy Memorial Day Cohasset!

Eleanora Sears opened the door

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Annika Sorenstam, you done good. Now let me tell you about a Boston socialite named Eleanora Sears. Without her, Annika, you may never have had the chance to test your not inconsiderable golfing talents against the menfolk in real life.

Eleanora, born in 1881 with more silver spoons than teeth in her mouth, was 28 years old on Aug. 13, 1910, when she led a team of four women against a team of men in a four-chukker polo match in Narraganset Pier with two of the girls (including Eleanor) riding astride their horses and two riding side saddle.

Then two days later, Eleanora and a women named Emily Randolph took on a team of two men. It is not recorded who won but I'll bet on the girls because Eleanora hated to lose, even at squash which she took up when she was almost 50 and won a women's singles title. The New York Times said the polo match "caused a sensation."

As Babe Didrickson helped to open the door for Annika Sorenstam did Eleanora Sears help open the door for the Babe.

Eleanora did everything athletic well. She discovered lawn tennis as a teenager in a day when the women's game was little more than pit-a-pat across a net and introduced power and speed to the game. She excelled at sailing, swimming, horseback riding. She was a better shot with a rifle than most of the men she competed against.

As Babe Didrickson helped to open the door for Annika Sorenstam did Eleanora Sears help open the door for the Babe, who, as everyone who has been reading the sports pages lately knows by now, was the last woman before Annika to play in a men's golf tournament.

Some of the Babe's feats have been raised into the realm of legend, like the assertion that she won 632 of the 634 events she competed in before she turned pro in 1932. One of her losses was as a member of a women's basketball team. In the other, she was the victim of one of those infamous Olympic judges.

She won the high jump, the javelin throw and the 80-meter hurdles in the 1932 Olympics at Los Angeles — but hold on a sec. The judges huddled and decided she had done something call the "Texas roll" to get over the bar and that was illegal so they gave the gold medal to Jean Shiley and the silver to the Babe.

The Babe's introduction to the javelin has a mythical quality to it, too. She wandered on a high school athletic field one day, picked up a javelin and asked the coach what it was and how it was used. Then she threw it and when the throw was measured it was found that it had exceeded the world's record for women at the time.

Before the 80-meter hurdles, it is said she went into an opposing dressing room and asked, "Which of you girls is going to run in the next race?" Several girls allowed that they were, whereupon the Babe, in all innocence, told them:

"It sure isn't going to be any fun beating nice girls like you. But I just can't help it. Somebody's got to win. That'll be me. But you girls come on. I'll let you see how I can run, and you'll be getting some nice exercise and some good fresh air."

Funny thing is, the Babe wasn't playing head games. She really meant it.

State senate delivers its $22.5 billion version of the budget

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

MICHAEL P. NORTON

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

No one on the Hill is going to really balance the budget this year.

That much became clear last week as state government chugged along in an environment of sluggish tax revenues, soaring health care costs, slashed programs and services and continuing public sentiment against cuts and tax hikes.

The Senate budget committee, having taken the same crash course in Budgeting in Tight Times that the House and Gov. Mitt Romney labored through, produced a spending plan similar to the other two in several notable ways.

The budget Gov. Romney receives next month might be balanced on paper, but it probably won't be sustainable unless the economy suddenly takes a sharp turn for the better. It's a tough time to be counting on that. And all of the budgets offered, including the new Senate bill, rely on revenues that won't be around this time next year.

If tax receipts and new fee revenues counted on to balance next year's budget don't materialize, it's not hard to imagine Romney being forced to unilaterally slash spending, using his 9C executive powers, sometime in early 2004. Or Romney may be pressured to veto hundreds of millions of dollars in spending come July. If structural, rather than annual, budget balance is the goal, that might be what it takes. It's not necessarily what will happen.

The Senate budget's bottom line was $22.5 billion, give or take a few hundred million dollars due to the innovative accounting procedures politicians are using to make their numbers work. On Beacon Hill these days, that's considered pretty close. It's also roughly the same amount of spending called for by Romney and the House. It shows the three entities disagree about how to get to a bottom line, but agree on that bottom line. That's good.

It shows the three entities disagree about how to get to a bottom line, but agree on that bottom line. That's good.

The Senate joined Romney and the House in slashing aid to cities and towns, education, the environment, affordable housing programs and as Senate budget chief Therese Murray embellished, every line item in the state budget. That is, every item except the ones she announced the Senate would preserve in its budget. But to be sure, there are cuts — Murray said $1.5 billion worth of reductions — and those cuts are on top of previous rounds of cuts.

Critics of the cuts say the social and fiscal ramifications of reducing spending on human services, education and health programs will come back to haunt state government. They argue further that the state, to get to its own balanced bottom line, is pushing decisions about raising taxes and preserving core services down to the local level.

Lastly, the Senate, again like Romney and the House, insisted its budget was honest and balanced in an era where politicians have increasingly resorted to what some call gimmicks and others call creative budgeting. The label depends on whether you, or your institutional or political nemesis, offered the idea. Most taxpayers see such ideas for what they are: crutches that balance the books on paper, but leave real deficits for future lawmakers to solve.

All of the budget balancers deserve credit for at least trying, and succeeding in many ways, to get to a balanced budget. Few of them want to cut spending on education, but they feel they have to in order to bring state spending in line with available revenues. Many lawmakers want to raise taxes, but they have adjusted to the reality that Romney will veto tax hikes and voters don't appear eager to contribute more to government. Those growing annual state spending with one-time revenues don't necessarily love the idea, but they don't have any better ones. And the Legislature wasn't crazy about restructuring government before Romney arrived, but now they're getting into it. The week also featured news on decisions made by three notable women in state government.

• Former Governor Swift joins venture capital firm — Former Gov. Jane Swift is returning to Boston, but probably not to a 9-5 grind. Swift is joining Arcadia Partners, a venture capital firm focused on the for-profit education and training industry, as a special general partner. Liam Donohue and Andrew W. Hallowell founded Arcadia in 1998.

• District attorney appointed by swift abandons Republican Party — Republicans had to be shaking their heads incredulously as they picked up morning papers and stared down photos of Sen. Edward Kennedy greeting newly converted Democrat Andrea Cabral. The Suffolk County sheriff appointed last year by Republican Gov. Jane Swift said she felted abandoned by the Grand Old Party. Gov. Romney said Cabral didn't stick around long enough to get to know the Republicans.

• Judge Lopez resigns, ending judicial conduct trial — The long saga of Superior Court Judge Maria Lopez, which has filled newscasts and newspapers for two years, abruptly ended last week. Lopez' attorney and husband called a press conference to announce her resignation. Lopez herself was in Cuba. Lopez berated prosecutors from the bench during the 2000 trial of a convicted molester, who she sentenced to probation. She has apologized for her outbursts, but maintained that others were out to get her both during the case and during her hearing before the Commission on Judicial Conduct. That panel had recommended that Lopez apologize and be suspended from the bench for six months.

• Senate follows through on Travaglini pledge — The budget also confirmed that another Beacon Hill reality remains despite new leadership in the Senate. On the Hill, the Senate remains the branch where most liberals turn first for relief from budget cuts, especially in the health care and education arenas. Senators spent the week touting plans to preserve programs that serve the vulnerable. The Senate alone has proposed fully funding the $96 million prescription drug program for seniors. Senators are intent on keeping open methadone clinics that serve heroin addicts. They propose spending $90 million to put 36,000 long-term unemployed people back on taxpayer-funded health care plans. And senators boosted House funding levels for programs that help students pass the MCAS exam and help schools keep class sizes down.

• New report maps school choice options — Despite numerous programs intended to give parents more choices about where to send their kids to school, opportunities are unevenly and inequitably distributed throughout Massachusetts and there's a stark shortage of choices for many parents, according to a study discussed by experts. The Boston Foundation-sponsored report by the Center for Education Policy & Research at MassINC looks closely at which communities are most and least involved in school choice.

• Oil spill far worse than initially reported — The Coast Guard announced 98,000 gallons of oil leaked off a Bouchard Transportation tanker into Buzzard's Bay on April 27, not 14,700 gallons, as the company initially estimated. The governor announced he will file legislation raising the penalty for illegally discharging pollutants into the water from the $25,000 per day to $50,000. The legislation also allows for a $25,000 per day fine for making "false, inaccurate, incomplete or misleading statements" about an incident. Romney said the intent of the legislation was to force companies to put safety first.

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on three roll calls from prior sessions dealing with the House version of the state's $22.5 billion fiscal 2004 state budget. There were no roll call votes in the House or Senate last week.

CORPORATE TAX STUDY (H 4000)

House 91-65, approved an amendment creating a special seven-member commission to study the state's corporate tax policy and make recommendations by January 2004 about possible changes in the tax structure. The study commission would replace an original proposal requiring all banks, insurance companies and publicly traded corporations to annually file a report with the state disclosing extensive information from the companies' tax returns. The information would include the number of employees, gross and net income, tax liability, exemptions, deductions and credits. Supporters of the study commission said the disclosure proposal goes too far and noted the study is a compromise that will allow the state to look into corporate tax policy and gather appropriate information for possible future action. They argued that the state recently closed many corporate tax loopholes and said that the disclosure proposal is anti-business and will discourage companies from remaining or locating in Massachusetts. Some opponents of the study commission said it is a cleverly designed amendment to kill the disclosure requirements. They argued that one-third of the state's top 50 companies pay only the minimum $456 annual corporate tax and said it is time to gather detailed information to see if the state should repeal some of the tax breaks given to big corporations over the past few years and whether these companies have kept their promises to increase jobs. Other opponents of the study said they oppose both the disclosure and the study and argued that companies are already paying their fair share of taxes and should not be harassed and driven out of the state. (A "Yea" vote is for the study commission. A "Nay" vote is against the study commission).

Y

$800 MILLION CAP ON CAPITAL SPENDING BORROWING (H 4000)

House 130-25, approved an amendment capping the amount of money the state can borrow for capital spending projects through June 2008 at $800 million per year. These include construction and maintenance projects in the areas of the environment, transportation, housing and school construction. The governor's administration currently lives under a voluntary $1.2 billion annual cap. The amendment also requires a two-thirds rather than a majority vote of the legislature to spend any money from the state's rainy day fund. Amendment supporters said state borrowing is getting out of hand and argued it is expensive and difficult to service enormous debt during these troubled fiscal times. They also noted that it is important to ensure that money is used from the rainy day fund only when there is an overwhelming need and strong legislative support. Some amendment opponents said more public works projects are good for the state's economy because they create jobs and generate millions of dollars in federal funds. Others said they believed it is unconstitutional for for the legislature to impose the cap. (A "Yea" vote is for the $800 million cap. A "Nay" vote is against it).

INCREASE FUNDING FOR REGIONAL SCHOOL TRANSPORTATION (H 4000)

House 20-133, rejected an amendment increasing funding for state reimbursement to communities for regional school district transportation by $15.3 million (from $26.4 million to $41.7 million) and reducing funding for a new grant program to state colleges and universities by the same $15.3 million (from $30 million $14.7 million). The higher education grant program provides grants to schools that meet certain criteria including having cut costs through demonstrated administrative efficiency and savings. Communities in regional school districts are required by the state to provide transportation for all students. Amendment supporters said the additional $15.3 million would level fund the transportation reimbursement at last year's level and argued that these small communities cannot absorb a 37 percent cut when the state is also cutting local aid. Amendment opponents said they sympathize with the $15.3 million reduction for transportation but argued that the new higher education grant program has already been reduced from $30 million to $24.5 million. They said this grant program is necessary to help these institutions that are the victims of major budget cuts. Both sides noted this Hobson's choice is a difficult one that does not have a perfect answer. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment adding $15.3 million for regional school transportation and reducing the higher education grant program by $15.3 million. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).

International friendship grows at Community Garden Club

By Sandra Durant
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

It was with great pleasure that the members of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset met Takako Kohri, an officer of their new Sister Club in Nagoya Japan, and her husband, Fumio Kohri, at their annual luncheon on Tuesday at the Barker Tavern.

In July of 2001, recording secretary, Iku Isihara, was contacted by a group of friends in Japan who were interested in starting an American-style garden club. Upon receiving information on sister clubs from then president, Ann Pompeo, and Iku, the Nagoya Garden Club was formed on October 25, 2001. The spirit of a sister club is "to facilitate building of friendships among garden clubs throughout the world". In this spirit, they were sent the yearbook, the monthly newsletter, and are corresponded with on a regular basis sharing information and offering guidance when needed.

On Wednesday, Takako and Fumio, started the day touring the Lightkeeper's Cottage garden, Constitution Park, and the Lothrup house guided by Phyllis Peck and Barbara Dillon. These are gardens maintained by the Community Garden Club. Marcia Diekman and Pat Stewart then showed the Kohri's the member's gardens at Marcia◊s, Meg Moore's, Sally Avery's, and Fran O'Toole's homes. This was followed by a lunch at Mary Eisenhaure's home. Mary hosted the lunch.

The Club thanks Iku and her husband, Akira, for being the Kohri's gracious hosts during their three-day visit to Cohasset.

Quality over quantity

CHS track team advances 11 athletes to state meet

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The roster numbers may have been below expectations for this season, but the performances most certainly were not.

The Cohasset High track team will send 11 athletes to compete in 12 events at this Saturday's Division 4 state meet at Norwell High, numbers which far surpass the final tally of several far larger schools with far larger track rosters. Four of the 11 boys Al LaFountain carries will see their spring seasons extended this Saturday, as will all eight of the girls he has utilized this season.

"We've done very well considering our relatively small roster," attested LaFountain, the fifth year CHS coach, who, unlike the majority of his peers, oversees both the girls and boys program.

Senior captains Ian Kidder and Jared Krupczak have each qualified for three solo events and as part of the 4x100 meter relay team. Of course, they must each throw out one of the solo events, with athletes being permitted to compete in just one event apiece on the field and the track.

Kidder, who missed much of the season due to a hamstring strain, has chosen to compete in the javelin rather than the triple jump, and will also run in the 200-meter sprint.

Krupczak is considered an excellent candidate to advance in the 200 from states to next weekend's all-state meet after his second place finish at this past Sunday's South Shore Principal's meet. The senior won his second qualifier race with a time of 23.78 seconds, and then finished only 0.26 seconds behind Brockton High stud Robert Simpson in the championship race, crossing the line second for a 23.44 clocking.

Jared, the younger brother of two-time state Div. 4 200-meter champ Bryan Krupczak, has chosen to run the 200 rather than the 100, and will also compete in the long jump, as well as the 4x100.

A third member of that 4x100 squad, senior Braun Goodson, will also compete in the discus.

The final member of the 4x1 team, junior Eric Belz, will run in the 100-meter dash.

The girls will see two relay teams race on Saturday, the 4x100 and 4x800 squads, and also compete in four solo endeavors.

Postseason hopes sky high after historic regular season

The Cohasset boys' lacrosse team will take a record-setting 15-game winning streak into the state Div. 3 tournament, an event in which they have been given the number-one seed and homefield advantage throughout.

With a first-round bye, Cohasset is tentatively scheduled to open the tournament on June 4 at Alumni in a quarterfinal match. The time hasn't yet been set, in part because Cohasset's annual Class Night is also scheduled for that date.

The Skippers' opponent will be the winner of a contest between two vocational school squads – Tri-County and Minuteman – which compete in the Massachusetts Technical School League. Those teams split in their regular season meetings.

"We're really excited to be recognized as one of the top teams," said coach Kevin Orcutt, whose accomplishments were recognized by his Pilgrim League peers when they named him league Coach of the Year last week, "and we can't wait to begin tournament play. We'll have ten days off, which gives us a chance to rest our legs, heal some injuries, and add a few wrinkles to our offense. We probably won't face anyone we've already played, but I expect we'll be scouted by coaches asking other coaches what our tendencies are. I think, by June 4, we'll ready to spring some surprises."

The Skippers concluded their historic regular season last Wednesday night, May 21, when they topped non-league opponent Canton 14-7 behind an all-star performance from senior midfielder John Durkin.

Durkin, perhaps the best this spring among several outstanding Cohasset midfielders, finished the night with four goals and three assists while regularly disrupting Canton's defensive clears. His most important score came with just six seconds left in the first half after the Bulldogs had closed to a 6-4 deficit. Picking up a ground ball, Durkin ran through two defenders and put a hard bounce shot into the upper corner of the night to push the lead back to three as the Skippers headed to the locker room.

"John Durkin is just having a great, great season," said Orcutt. "I can't think of another Pilgrim League midfielder, other than perhaps Duxbury's Ben Fuchs, who plays as hard at both ends of the field. We ask John – and Robert Hickey, who is clearly one of the top faceoff men in eastern Massachusetts — to be out there for close to 80 percent of the game. At any other position, that's not a big deal. But for a middie, going 80 yards at top speed with every change of possession, it takes tremendous stamina and mental toughness. John and Robert have both."

Debate over

Cohasset girls tennis now the clear power in SSL

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

In the South Shore League, only two towns have a legitimate case in the debate as to which school has the top girls tennis team: Cohasset and Norwell. For years, the teams have traded the SSL title banner back and forth, often times even sharing the crown as co-champions after splitting the home-away head-to-head sets during the regular season. The teams have had some excellent matches in recent years, competitive in nature with rivalries up and down the line-ups.

This year, however, Cohasset proved it has the top team. End of debate.

"They are a step higher than us," conceded first singles Norwell junior Angie Bizzozero, the lone winner in the Lady Clippers 3-1, rain-curtailed loss to Cohasset last Thursday. "We have been losing players (lost-to-graduation standouts Sara Bitetti and Ashley Dye) and they have been gaining players."

Although Cohasset did lose all-star Kelly Stone to graduation in 2002, the Lady Skippers have been the benefactor of a tremendous freshman class, sparked by Chelsea Grossman and Amelia Shea, providing depth to an already superb lineup.

The match took place in Cohasset, and was already

Down to the wire

It all comes down to this: the Cohasset High girls lacrosse team had to have beaten Nantucket yesterday at home to qualify for postseason play.

The odds for victory seemed pretty good heading into that regular season finale, played after Mariner press time, considering the Lady Skippers (6-7-2) already took down the Whalers at their place earlier in the season.

"It would be a shame to have it end after the way we stayed in contention," said Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney, who was hoping to make it two-for-two in postseason trips. "Hopefully, we can carry the momentum from (Tuesday night) into this last game."

Indeed, win or lose on Wednesday, what happened less than 24 hours before that game was played is certainly worth a mention.

Staring the death of their postseason dreams squarely in the face, trailing 9-6 with under six minutes to go playing Tuesday night under the lights at Scituate High, the Lady Skippers rallied for three dramatic goals and then thwarted a couple of late Scituate rushes to hold on for the tie.

We say the Lady Skippers scored three goals, but, in reality, it was the Nicole Turgiss show. The junior midfielder scored at 5:34 and then again at 3:32, finishing off a pair of scintillating solo efforts by bouncing shots by Scituate goalie Darby St. Claire-Barrie to make it a 9-8 game.

Turgiss then drew a penalty near the goal box with precisely a minute showing on the game clock, and beat Darby-St. Claire on the awarded free shot over her right shoulder for her sixth goals of the game.

Going out on a high note

Baseball team wins final two games

By Mike Spellman
MMSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Though the season didn't pan out quite as well as hoped for the Cohasset High baseball team, at least the boys closed on a high note.

Non-league wins over Holbrook and Millis to wrap up the season last week allowed the Skippers to finish with an overall record of 7-11.

A 3-2 win over Holbrook on Thursday saw the emergence of freshman pitcher Chris Bryan. The righty threw a complete game two-hitter against the host Bulldogs, striking out eight along the way.

"Obviously, that was a pretty impressive varsity debut," said first year Skippers coach Al Gallotta, "a nice preview for next season."

Sophomore Ted Straughn led the offensive with a couple of hits and an RBI, and junior shortstop Mike Dooley had a pair of hits and a run scored.

Dooley took to the mound for his first varsity start in the finale 24 hours later, and he too wound up going the distance to lead the way to an 8-4 win, striking out five while scattering six hits.

Junior John Andrade, moving from second base to shortstop in place of Dooley, had two hits and a run knocked in for the Skippers. Sophomore catcher Louis Blanco also doubled home a run in a two-hit performance, while Dooley helped his own cause with a hit and two stolen bases out of the leadoff spot.

her own hands, which is precisely what you hope to see from your seniors," lauded Sweeney.

The host Sailors— who were just knocked out of postseason contention in their previous game, a heartbreaking one goal loss to Norwell—won the ensuing faceoff, however, and managed to fire off a couple of shots on Cohasset goalie Gia Petrakis before the Lady Skippers were able to regain control of the ball and run out the clock, content to settle at that point for the tie and yesterday's must win scenario.

Scituate scored the games first three goals, and took a 5-2 lead into the half after Cohasset allowed a pair to be potted inside the final minute prior to the break. Cohasset had cut the deficit to one on Lauren Rizzoti's 14th goal of the season and Lisa Spirito's sixth.

Turgiss scored three goals in succession to get the Lady Skippers within a goal midway through the second half at 6-5.

Scituate stars Lauren Glancy, Alyse Kennedy and Morgan Kenney answered right back, however, pushing the hosts back into a four goal lead.

Ashley Faber started Cohasset's final run with a goal near the eight minute mark. The junior, a skilled defender, was pulled to the offensive side of midfield in a desperation move by Sweeney to jump start the offense. With the goal and change of momentum, the coach was left looking pretty good.

"The girls are the ones who did it," asserted Sweeney. "To come back the way they did against a Scituate team that had already beaten us pretty good once this year was just fantastic. That was all heart there."

If the Lady Skippers won yesterday, they'll be waiting, along with all other teams with .500 and better records, for the MIAA to release its tourney seedings and brackets on Friday afternoon.

One coach's rant that's been a long time in coming

MIKE SPELLMAN

The good news is Valerie Yianacopolus will probably be kept on a short leash around kids for the rest of her natural life. The even better news is the anonymous Wakefield Little Leaguer who Valerie ordered beaten for having the audacity to root against her son's team will recover physically, and, we're guessing, mentally as well. Kids are resilient like that. And Wakefield Little League officials, on the whole, will be a little wiser for the wear.

Unfortunately, the collateral damage won't stop there. The secondary victims in all of this will be countless other adults who are involved in youth sports — 95 percent of whom, based on my observations, are there for the right reason and who do the right thing 95 percent of the time.

I like to think I belong to this extremely healthy majority, and that's why, whenever we get an extremely isolated incident such as this one, I feel it in a different way than most people. I hear the remarks that invariably follow in the wake of these incidents — the broad, sweeping indictments such as: "Adults are ruining youth sports."... "People get into coaching for the wrong reason."... "You just can't trust anyone around your kids these days."

Of course, most of these remarks are spoken out of ignorance by people who've never given any thought to spending time around youth sports. Still, it's disheartening to think those opinions exist on any level out there.

I have coached youth sports virtually year round for the last six years between soccer, basketball, baseball, summer travel baseball, indoor soccer and Special Olympics. And I have a good number of friends who've followed a similar path.

I just hate to think there might actually be people out there looking down their noses at any of these self-sacrificing, caring folks.

Sure, we're not perfect. Sometimes a bit too much of our competitive nature spills out, but I honestly feel that my estimated 95 percent of the good coaches know when and how to rein it in.

In all of my years of involvement, I can count on one hand the number of incidents I've witnessed where, in my opinion, a coach acted inappropriately. And, quite frankly, I feel I've got a pretty low threshold of tolerance.

And this is a vocation, I assert, that has a pretty good built-in system of policing. If the coach is not there for the "right reasons," that generally becomes apparent pretty quickly. I've seen a couple of those folks weeded out, and quite a few more than that realize it themselves and save us the trouble.

In the interest of candor, I admit there are times a player of mine has made a mistake on the field, floor or turf and I've let him know about it instantly, crying out things such as "keep your body between the man and the goal/basket" "get in front of the ball" "don't throw behind the runner." That kind of thing.

I don't believe I've ever exhibited outward signs of anger or even annoyance when I've hollered these things out, and I always try to balance these "instant corrections" by adding a "good try" or "nice hustle" and then pull the player aside later to reinforce my remarks in a positive manner. From what I've seen, this is standard operating procedure for the vast majority of my peers. Still, some would say we're adding to the embarrassment of these players. Others would say, in fact, this practice is inappropriate.

I would disagree. I would say this is the best way to teach. The player might be a little embarrassed, but he or she will connect that embarrassment with the instant lesson enforcement, thereby increasing the likelihood of doing things right the next time and, thus, feeling good about him or herself.

Some of you might see this as a rationalization for an over-competitive nature. That's fine; you're entitled to your opinion. Oftentimes, admittedly, there is a fine line. Coaching is not an easy job. The only rewards are intrinsic. And this is precisely why the vast majority of folks prefer to stand on the sidelines.

Well, those folks who agree to step away from the sideline and into the spotlight deserve, for that alone, at least a modicum of respect. As I asserted on top, 95 percent of the folks who get involved with youth sports do so for the right reasons.

It is indeed sad commentary on us as a society that one screwball can detract even one iota from so much of the noble and selfless work that's being done.

their best clockings almost every time out over the last few weeks, topping out with a 10:20 timing last week at the South Shore League meet.

Sophomore Silvia and junior Buckley will also run in the 800 and mile, respectively, on Saturday. Buckley will compete additionally in her best field event, the javelin.

Whitney, a junior, will run in the 400, having finally met the state qualifying standard in her final chance Sunday, posting a 1:03.13 at the Principal's meet.

The 4x100 team has a representative from all four CHS classes: senior La'Raine Langford, junior Elisa Jerome, sophomore Lindsey Kennedy and freshman Allison Krupczak (yup, same family). Langford will also run in the 100-meter hurdles after having qualified for that race with her time at the South Shore League meet last Tuesday.

"I think every athlete and every team we're sending to the divisional meet has a legitimate chance to advance to All-States," asserted LaFountain. "We did well at the (South Shore) League Meet and at the Principals Meet. We're definitely seeing some strong performances right now."

Cohasset's Eric Belz will compete in the 100-meter dash as well as the 4x100 relay at this Saturday's state Div. 4 meet.

Track Notes

Speaking of the Principal's meet, held this past Sunday at Norwell High, both the CHS boys and girls teams finished 12th overall in strong 30-something team fields.

As previously noted, Krupczak took second in the 200, but Belz was not far off that pace, running a fifth place 24.51.

Kidder threw the javelin 157-07, good for fourth place. Freshman Mark Bouchard took 35th in this competition with a throw of 90-feet, but his real personal highlight was a seventh place finish in the freshman 1-mile race (5:19.6).

For the girls, teammates Silvia and Buckley pushed one another hard to the finish line in the 800, taking third and fourth, respectively, with times of 2:22.79 and 2:24.96.

Buckley also took a fifth place in the javelin (99-04), and the 4x800 team of Silvia, Buckley, Whitney and Langford (filling in for the absent Musto) took third with a run of 10:32.71.

Whitney, as previously mentioned, qualified for the 400 with her seventh place finish of 1:03.13.

Tenth place finishes were also taken in qualifying heats by Jerome in the 100 (14.1) and Kennedy in the 200 (29.69).

underway when heavy rains led to slippery courts, which, for safety's sake, led to a rarely played indoor high school match on clay surface at the Cohasset Tennis and Squash Club.

Bizzozero took the win at the number one spot over Cohasset's Lindsay Grossman, a senior who has primarily been at second singles, but filled in at the top spot for sophomore Elizabeth Stone (sprained ankle). Winning by a 6-2, 6-4 score, Bizzozero maintained a personal record of, like her team, only two losses, one of them coming to Stone, who will be available once the playoffs begin today.

Junior Holly Graham of Cohasset won at third singles 6-0, 6-0 over Carlie Arena, making hers the only position to finish an entire regulation match before the move indoors.

Senior Julie Shea and junior Courtney Caron of the Lady Skippers overcame a first set 6-4 loss to handle the rest of the three setter for a 6-1, 6-1 win. Juniors Emilie Sullivan and Corey Evans wrapped up the match, gaining Cohasset's third and decisive point with a 6-4, 6-2 second doubles win over Kate Mulvaney and Kathryn Ankner.

With Cohasset up 3-1, and the Cohasset boys team anxiously awaiting free court time to play Abington, it was unnecessary to finish the second singles match between Chelsea Grossman and Meg Kelley, after the two had split sets 7-5, 5-7.

"They are a very talented team," affirmed Clipper coach Derek Sulc. "They are strong at every position down the line. We would have to be playing our best to beat them."

Cohasset (10-0 SSL, 16-0 overall) heads into tourney action, likely on Friday after a preliminary round bye. Norwell (8-2, 10-8) will probably begin postseason play on Thursday, after a season of very strong non-league opponents of Hingham, Bourne, Scituate and Hanover. Harwich and Abington round out the SSL teams that have made it to the playoffs with plus-.500 records.

Cohasset looks loaded up for their run at the school's first ever Sectional championship in the sport. The team went 4-0 last week in what coach Sarah Meehan called the toughest week of the season, facing Norwell twice, Hingham and Div. I Notre Dame Academy, all without their number one, Stone.

Durkin, with his seven points, finished the regular season with 27 goals and 12 assists, fourth best on the team. His total was bested only by seniors Curt Kahn (45 goals, 30 assists) and Tom Anderson (24 goals, 18 assists), and soph Jake Previte (41 goals, 20 assists), all three of whom have seen a lot – if not all – their time at attack.

In the second half, Cohasset outscored the Bulldogs 9-5, sealing the victory.

Besides Durkin, Skipper scorers included classmates Robert Hickey (one goal) and Tom Anderson (a goal and three assists) – allowed Cohasset to dominate the middle of the field for most of the game.

"Our attack now has to match the midfield's and the defense's intensity," said coach Kevin Orcutt. "We've got a lot of talent at attack, but they play as if they can turn it on and off as needed. To win a state championship, we need a full 48 minutes from them."

Curt Kahn led the attack in scoring with four goals and three assists, while Jake Previte had three goals and two assists, and Mike Rasmussen picked up a goal and an assist.

Nick Murphy had nine saves on the night.

In the tournament seedings, Martha's Vineyard was number two with a 16-2 record, followed by Medfield, the champ of the Tri Valley League, Weston and Ipswich. Were form to hold true, Cohasset would face the winner of Ipwich-Weston in the semi-final.

"Anyone in the top five has a legitimate chance at the title," said Orcutt. "They're all fine teams from solid programs. It will come down to desire, and my job is to make sure we want it more than anybody else."

Three Generations of Rug Making
Since the early 1900's the Jafri family has been making and selling rugs around the world. Just outside of Lahore Pakistan is the original Dover workshop where many of our rugs are still made today, the same way they were made back then- by hand.

Rugs in School
A rug can teach you alot about art, history, culture, and tradition. We can learn about the tradition of rug making. Every year, school children visit our store and design their own rugs.

Dover Rug is proud to sponser The Second Annual June Conference on the Palestine-Israeli Conflict. June 17-19, Belmont Hill School.

Cohasset Family Lax Day and Youth Night

The Cohasset Lacrosse Boosters will be holding their annual Family Lax Day for all players, parents, and fans of youth lacrosse on Father's Day, Sunday June 15th at Miliken Field from 12 - 5PM. Last year's inaugural event was a great time for everyone and this year promises to be even bigger and better as we will be including the girls youth program and incorporating the HS Alumni game into the festivities. The best BBQ and buffet in town, visits from the Boston Cannons, camp raffles, t-shirt and hat sales, and special attractions for all ages; will provide a perfect backdrop for a full day of match-ups featuring head-to-head competition between the teams at each age level for this year's bragging rights. The games are always a thrilling way to close out our Spring season so mark your calendars as we look forward to seeing everyone in the lacrosse community for a great day of fun and excitement to celebrate another fantastic season of youth lacrosse in Cohasset.

Also, congratulations to our High School Varsity team for getting the top seed in their State Championship drive and in securing home field advantage throughout the playoffs!

As part of their march to victory, the Boosters will also be hosting Youth Night during the first game of the playoffs (currently scheduled for June 4th). All Cohasset Youth lax players that attend wearing their playing jerseys will receive free pizza and soda in addition to seeing some great lacrosse action by their hometown heroes, so come on out and cheer our boys onto the next round and then to the Championship!

Lacrosse fundraiser succeeds

By Lyn Congdon Previte
COHASSET LACROSSE

With several other fundraisers going on in town at the same time, PSO telethon, baseball, ASP, and Camp Bournedale, the 100 Lacrosse players in grades 7-12 managed to do a bang-up job at selling enough coupon "tickets" to fund the JV team for the next school year! We met our goal! This was the first time the lax-ers have attempted this type of fundraising and although it proved interesting coordinating six coaches and six teams, it was a huge success. Look out everyone—maybe this will have to be an annual event!

I would like to extend huge debts of gratitude to the following people for the following reasons: Dave Buick—President of the Lax Boosters—for leading me through myriad personalities and preventing me from destroying a few coaches (Sorry, Curt—I forgot to seek him out before I lambasted you! My apologies!!)...Kudos to Bill Grimm for sticking with the project right to the very end, "to the counting of the pennies" in my living room. At this point, I was operating on about three brain cells and Bill's diligence and steady stride was invaluable. Thanks to Bob Turgiss for venturing out into uncharted waters and working for me for the first time. The question is: Will he dare do it again? And the last, but not at all the least person on the committee, Lucia Flibotte—whose fast thinking and creativity kept the fires burning.

To all the parents who "rode" the kids and drove them around on the "Blitz" day: MaryBeth Butman, Ann Dooley, Grace Evans, Larry Evans, Jeannie Hajjar, Sally Marr, Sue Turgiss (who, by the way, left without her designated map and headed straight for the "Gold Coast"), Susan and Steve Etkind, Lisa Swain, Maggie Smith, Kate Murphy, MaryAnn Devine, Brenda and Colin Regan and Mike Libby. Thanks to the Gridiron Club: Coach Silvia—who helped us with the street maps!

Our thanks also go to the school administration which, in the end, came through with their support.

All in all, it was a fun event and I was very impressed with the leadership we received from the captains—of both the Varsity teams, who stayed until the last minute. The kids on all of these teams were a pleasure to work with.

Final thanks go to our community for your support of these athletes. They work very hard—everyday—being the best they can be—on the field and off. It isn't easy to be an athlete in this school system—the "bar" is very high, both athletically and academically. Our local restaurants and merchants were all very accommodating and supportive as well: Atlantica, The Village Butcher and Deli, The Red Parrot, DiNero's, TGIF Fridays, Chili's, Papa Gino's and Jiffy Lube. This fundraiser would not have happened without their help.

So to all of you who reached down in your pockets to assist them, our hats are off to you and all of us thank you kindly for your support.

'Silent No More' talk on abortion May 30

Georgette Forney, a nationally-known spokesperson on behalf of post-abortive women, will speak on Friday, May 30 from 7-9 p.m. at St. Paul School Hall, 18 Fearing Road, Hingham. Forney is co-founder of Silent No More, a national campaign that includes actress Jennifer O'Neill and aims to raise awareness about the after-effects of abortion.

The Silent No More campaign also seeks to reach out to women by offering them abortion recovery help. According to testimony that O'Neill gave at a Capitol Hill briefing last fall, 43 percent of women who have reached the age of 45 have had an abortion. This means that every third child who is conceived is aborted.

Forney had an abortion at age 16, and at age 35 she experience healing and forgiveness by going through the Forgiven and Set Free abortion-recovery program. Through this experience, she developed a greater understanding of the negative impact that abortion has on society and on women, and a desire to share the knowledge that help is available.

Forney is also executive director for NOEL, the National Organization of Episcopalians for Life. In addition, she is on the steering committee for the Women Deserve Better Campaign — a pro-life coalition outreach effort dedicated to showing how abortion hurts women and provides practical alternatives.

Forney's talk is free and open to the public. It is part of a statewide tour and is sponsored locally by the South Shore and Braintree-Weymouth Chapters of Massachusetts Citizens for Life.

Contact Anne Fox at 781-449-1774.

MCFL South Shore will next meet on Tuesday, June 10, at 7:30 p.m. at St. Paul's Parish House, Fearing Road, Hingham. New members are welcome. The chapter thanks all those who helped make its annual fundraising yard sale last month a success.

Summer Arts at Derby

Summer Arts at Derby is beginning its 14th year at Derby Academy in Hingham. The five-week program offers more than 100 courses in visual arts, drama, dance, music writing, photography, martial arts, video, gymnastics and sports. There are also special offerings, such as cooking, Spanish language and culture, yoga, chess, Web page design and Tai Chi.

In addition to regular classes, there is a noon-time show and a free-choice period with new offerings each day. The "Weathervane" newspaper is produced daily. This summer's musical production is the popular "The Music Man." On Friday, Aug. 1, Summer Arts culminates in an Arts Festival featuring performances of theatre, dance, music, gymnastics, and exhibits of clay, painting, furniture, mosaics, puppets, jewelry and photography. Animated films and videos are also shown.

The goal of Summer Arts is to offer a very high quality arts experience to children, ages eight to 15 with an atmosphere that is exciting and bursting with creativity. The children are from diverse racial, cultural and economic backgrounds — 20 Massachusetts communities are represented. One of the main goals is to create a spirit of cooperation and respect, where the students feel supported and free to express themselves.

The program is staffed by professional artist-teachers and together with the students, they create a special summer of artistic achievement, acceptance and exuberant energy.

Dependable's Read to Ride program

Dependable Cleaners is giving area children another reason to hit the books this summer, with its fifth annual Read to Ride reading incentive program. Participating in Read to Ride is easy! Entry forms will be available at all 17 Dependable Cleaners locations and participating bike shops from until July 11. More than 30,000 entry forms have also been distributed to many schools, libraries and youth organizations throughout the South Shore and Boston. Children may enter once for each book they read. Grant helps combat drunk driving Drunk driving is a violent crime that claims a life every 32 minutes in America. To enhance its ability to arrest and to help convict drunk drivers, the Cohasset Police Department has received a new Breath Alcohol Testing System (BATS) as part of the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau's (GHSB) "You Drink & Drive, You Lose" Campaign. Each BATS is valued at $9,800 and requires no additional expense for a community to deploy.

"Our new BATS will allow us to more efficiently process those arrested for drunk driving and to report the required information faster to state authorities," said Chief Robert Jackson. "Instead of officers pinned down doing the extensive paperwork related to impaired driving arrests, we can get them back out onto the streets to protect our community."

With a federal highway safety grant, the GHSB is providing $4.5 million to purchase 425 BATS units for local police departments, state police barracks, municipal police training academies, the MBTA police and select college campus police departments by June, 2003. The GHSB is promoting the BATS distribution program to local law enforcement with the assistance of the Massachusetts Chiefs of Police Association. The State Police's Office of Alcohol Testing is certifying the new BATS units as well as providing the required training and technical support.

A stitch in time

'Girlhood Embroidery' exhibit offers a wide sampling of samplers

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

Some of the only artifacts around today that offer a glimpse into the childhood of early American girls are on display in a rare exhibit at Pilgrim Hall Museum in Plymouth.

"Girlhood Embroidery," a selection of 17 samplers culled from the collections of private collectors, the Massachusetts Mayflower Society, the John Alden House in Duxbury and the museum itself, demonstrates the art, education and pastimes of young girls and women during the 19th, 18th and even 17th centuries.

"Samplers showed off the needlework skills that defined refinement for women up until around the 1830s or 1840s. Up until about then, needlework, along with some music and art, was a women's education," said Pilgrim Hall Museum Curator Jane Port.

The collection includes the priceless Loara Standish sampler, worked by a daughter of Pilgrim colonist and Mayflower passenger Myles Standish, and is considered to be the very first known American sampler.

One of seven children, Loara was born sometime after 1627 and grew up with her family in Duxbury, across the harbor from the first Plymouth settlement. Experts say Loara's sampler, done in 1650, shows that she was a fine needlewoman, taught more than likely by her mother, another relative or a neighbor.

Pilgrim Hall Museum curator Jane Port shows off the collection of 17 samplers on display through June 1.

While the sampler is always housed at the museum, the fragile nature of the sampler allows it to be displayed only very rarely.

"The are so fragile and light destroys them over time," said Port. "It is a very rare occurrence to see so many early samplers on display at one time," she said.

Port said the exhibit came about because members of the Massachusetts Mayflower Society wanted a venue to display their samplers. One of the society's collection includes a sampler worked by the youngest crafter in the exhibit, 6-year-old Susanna Thayer. The sampler was made in 1800 and is typical of a very young girls' work, with the alphabet and her name cross-stitched on an 8-inch square of linen.

Experts say that pieces such as these have particular value because of their provenance, or the ability to trace their owner and their origins. One

The New Art Forum of Kingston has invited comparisons to Montmartre, the famous and prestigious art district of Paris.

The members of the Kingston Forum would probably never make a claim to such presumptuous, world-class status, but for the last eight years, the group has offered an outlet and opportunity for local artists to meet, collaborate, talk shop and exchange ideas on a regular basis, much like the elite clubs and circles of Montmartre.

The New Art Forum meets for discussions, lectures and slide shows every other week in Kingston, at the 1809 Yankee Barn Gallery, the renovated barn/artist's studio and showplace loft of group co-founder Lilias Cingolani.

Also, since 1997 the Forum has held its own series of exhibitions open to the public, usually one to three per year, also at the barn in Kingston. The group's annual spring exhibit

1960s Girl Group musical magic comes to North Quincy

By R. Scott Reedy

Aretha Franklin, Tina Turner, Connie Francis, Petula Clark, The Chiffons, and, of course, The Supremes are just a few of the female singers and girl groups whose songs and style will be affectionately saluted in the musical revue "Beehive," which JM Productions Dinner Theater will bring to Raffael's in North Quincy for its Boston area premiere next week.

"We're very excited about this show," explained JM Productions President John F. McDonald, Jr. last week by telephone from his Quincy home. "We hold the exclusive rights to 'Beehive' for one year in this market. It's been produced with great success off-Broadway and in San Francisco. Productions are still running in Fort Lauderdale and San Diego, too. This is a book show that has really proven itself in other markets. We're so excited about it that we are pursuing other venues to present it at when we

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Whether the original Rueben sandwich was invented in 1914 at Rueben's in Manhattan or created for Charlie Chaplin's leading lady, Annette Seelos, is a matter for historians, and not cooks. What is of interest to cooks is that since it stumbled on the American culinary scene with its mongrel ingredient list – corned beef, rye, Swiss cheese, and sauerkraut – it has won sandwich contests as well as the hearts and minds of hungry Americans. Sweet and salty, hot and cool, tender and crisp, a good Rueben is much like Sophia Loren, an odd mixture of parts that comes together to form the perfect whole.

Although simple in construct, lots can go wrong with a bad Rueben: hot sauce in the dressing, tough corned beef, soggy bread, and a serious case of wrong proportions. Each component needs to be chosen properly and carefully balanced with each of the others. I began my testing with the dressing. Russian dressing is a combination of mayonnaise and ketchup with the addition of Worcestershire, onion, and sometimes horseradish, pimento, peppers, celery, parsley, chili sauce, or vinegar. I started with 1/2 cup mayonnaise as the base and added to it 2 tablespoons ketchup. That offered me the creamy, sweet tangy base that I was looking for. A half-teaspoon of Worcestershire sauce, 1 1/2 teaspoons chopped shallot, and 3/4-teaspoon horseradish were the only ingredients that worked well. I tested and rejected pimento, pepper, celery, parsley, chili sauce, and many types of vinegar. Even salt and pepper were not necessary.

As for the corned beef, there are two supermarket choices: corned beef brisket and round, the former more tender and therefore my top choice. I tried two brands – Boars Head and Pearl – and didn't notice much difference between them. I found about four ounces of meat that had been thinly sliced was enough to make a good-sized sandwich (New Yorkers used to mile-high Ruebens may wish to use more, although it is difficult to grill a thick sandwich). For bread, I preferred pumpernickel: black Russian rye was stronger and light rye was less flavorful. If you purchase your bread at the supermarket, look for deli-style bread that has a firm, moist texture and is sold in a large (maybe 5 1/2 inches or so) oval shape. (An "ethnic" name on the wrapper is also a good sign.)

As for the other ingredients, Swiss is the cheese traditionally used in the Rueben. Gruyere worked but isn't as easy to find. Mozzarella, American, Jack or cheddar just didn't taste right. Sauerkraut is sold in jars in the refrigerated section of most grocers. As with the corned beef, it all tasted the same. I found for each sandwich, I wanted about 1/4 cup of well-drained kraut. Of course I tried marinating the kraut in the Russian dressing (a technique used in some recipes) and found it a waste of time. I also tried substituting coleslaw for the sauerkraut but preferred the latter.

The assembly is easy enough. I used about 1 1/2 tablespoons of Russian dressing (a generous amount) per sandwich. Once the sandwich was put together I had to decide the best way to grill or toast it. I tried using the oven, as a recipe at FoodTV.com suggested, and the bread was warm but soggy. I wanted the crispy exterior of a grilled cheese so I moved on to a skillet. I buttered the bread and then toasted (grilled) the sandwiches over medium heat for about 2 1/2 to 3 minutes on each side. This left me with a well-browned and crisp exterior, melted cheese and a cool interior. Not only was this as described in the original recipe – it was delicious.

CLASSIC GRILLED REUBEN

If you want your Rueben hot all the way through, (this recipes leaves you with a slightly cool center) reduce the heat to low once both sides have browned and continue to cook for an additional 1 1/2 minutes on each side. You may also substitute Dijon mustard for the Russian dressing or eat the sandwich cold. If you substitute pastrami for the corned beef you have created Rueben's sister sandwich, the Rachel.

Russian Dressing

1/2 cup mayonnaise, regular or light (not low- or no-fat)

2 tablespoons ketchup or chili sauce

1/2teaspoon Worcestershire sauce

3/4 teaspoons prepared horseradish

1 1/2 teaspoons finely chopped shallot

The Sandwich

8 slices deli-style pumpernickel or rye bread

8 thin slices Swiss cheese

1 pound sauerkraut, drained well

3 tablespoons plus 1 teaspoon softened butter

1. For the dressing, mix all of the ingredients together in a small bowl. Use immediately or store covered in the refrigerator where it will keep for several days. Makes about 3/4 cup.

2. Heat a large skillet over medium heat. Place 2 slices of cheese on a slice of bread folding it over so it is not hanging off of the sides. Place four ounces of meat on top of the bread in the same manner. Top the meat with 1/4-cup sauerkraut. Spread about 1 1/2 tablespoons Russian dressing on another slice of bread and place it on the kraut, dressing side down. Spread one teaspoon of butter on top of the sandwich, flip it over and repeat with one more teaspoon of butter. Assemble the remaining three sandwiches in the same way.

3. Place the sandwiches in the hot skillet (you can cook them in batches if necessary) and cook until dark golden brown, about three minutes. Flip and cook on the second side until well-browned, about three minutes more. Remove from skillet and cut each sandwich in half. Serve immediately.

example was worked in 1740 by Elizabeth Hayward, born in 1728. She was fifth in descent from colonists John and Priscilla Alden. Another example is a sampler done in the early 19th century by Betsey Ellis Hutchinson, age 9. Her work shows that she learned her craft in a school run by the Turner sisters in Plymouth, where rose motifs and samplers done with octagonal centers were typical.

"What's also interesting to think about is these girls and women were doing this often complex needlework in the wilderness. If they ran out of a material, they had to wait for the next ship to come in," she said. Samplers were often worked in doorways, as early homes were dark and windows were small and few.

Peggy M. Baker, director and librarian of the Pilgrim Society and the Pilgrim Hall Museum, said these artifacts are important because they are among the only early American objects made by women.

"The only artifacts at Pilgrim Hall that were made directly by women are textiles — a beaded purse, an embroidered tabletop – and samplers," she said.

"Girlhood Embroidery" runs at the Pilgrim Hall Museum, Court Street, Plymouth, through June 1. Adult admission is $5, children 5-17 are $3, seniors are $4.50 and a family admission is $15. Plymouth adults and families are free.

Out of the ordinary throws its Opening Party this Friday evening, 7:30-9:30 p.m., and will run through June 8. The Opening will feature artworks by all of the Forum's now 25-member collaborative, plus pieces by art students at the nearby Sacred Heart School, along with live poetry reading and music, wine tasting and exotic desserts.

"The Forum is a collective of Kingston area artists and art teachers who have joined together to explore artistic endeavor and to present their work to the local public," said Cingolani, also a painter and mixed media artist with work on view in this year's spring exhibit.

Since launching the exhibit series six years ago, the New Art Forum has designated each succeeding show with a distinct title and theme. This spring's week-and-a-half-long event has the distinctly understated dubbing and motif of "Out of the Frame," which nominally and simply indicates artwork of various media presented without benefit of the convention of frames. But that should be the least of the non-conventions, as Cingolani promises the show itself will by design offer some of the most offbeat, exotic, experimental and eye-opening concepts and creations the Forum's members can dream up, with only the absence of frames in common.

Said Cingolani, "This year's exhibit will present a colorful, varied spectrum of two and three dimensional art. The idea came about when many of our members read about an international modern art show that took place in Australia last year. At this show, each artists was given a 9 X 12 foot space to exhibit their works of modern, off-the-wall and three-dimensional art. Our group decided to follow that example for our spring show."

Cingolani added that this should cover a wide-range of media in multi-dimensional and hybrid forms, including graphic arts, photography, watercolor, portraiture and landscape painting, fiber arts and more.

Two feature pieces were on display early as the show set up in the barn. "Harry's Travels," a mixed media/soft sculpture piece by Kingston artist Sylvia Vaz, renders an eye-catching image of an elderly tourist stereotype, with bad clothes, bad combover and other well-placed props such as a backpack canteen and Poland Spring bottle, seated on a bench scattered with travel brochures, composed of cloth, plaster, paper-mache and rubber among other materials.

There's also an as-yet untitled minimalist sculpture group-effort in stone, wood and paint by Beverly Steele, Joan Randall and Kathy Murphy, artists of various media also from Kingston. The work includes three cylinders representing each of the artists involved.

The New Art Forum of Kingston presents its annual spring show "Out of the Frame" at the renovated 1809 Yankee Barn, 228 Main St., Kingston, beginning May 30, at 7:30 p.m. The exhibit will be open for viewing on Saturdays and Sundays: May 31, June 1, 7, and 8, from 3 to 5 p.m. and Tuesday and Thursday evenings, June 3 and 5, from 7:30 to 9 p.m. For more information call Lilias Cingolani at 781-585-5622.

The sweet scents of springtime

Green thumbs up

Part 2
By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Outside my window, enchanting ribbons of deep blue forget-me-nots (Myosotis) thread their way through my shady borders amongst showy clumps of sunny yellow primroses, delicate clusters of columbines, elegant, architectural stands of Solomon's Seal, and handsome hostas. Despite our dreary weather, the shade gardens are bright and colorful as many charming spring-bloomers display their finery before the overhead canopy casts its summertime shadows.

Last week's momentary glimpse of summertime was all too fleeting as Mother Nature continues to torture gardeners with dank, gloomy weather. Unseasonably cool temperatures and limited sunshine have significantly delayed flowering and the leafing out of our trees and shrubs. Chilly soil temperatures are unfit for growing warm weather annuals and vegetables or sowing seeds. The traditional Memorial Day planting ritual is on hold for another week as frustrated dirt diggers make their purchases and in hopes of brighter days to come. Those who dared to plant prior to the holiday weekend may be watching their tender treasures sulk.

Many trees, shrubs and perennials, stressed by last summer's drought, have failed to break dormancy. The severity of this past winter certainly took its toll on many of these struggling plants. Although there are many casualties, patience is a necessity and may be rewarded with a late season recovery when the weather improves. Rhododendrons were hard hit by summer dryness and in their weakened condition, borers infiltrated their limbs leading to numerous dead branches which should be pruned back to viable growth. Desiccating winds scorched many evergreens causing winterburn but trimming the damaged tissue in conjunction with fertilizer, warmth and sunshine may enable many of these plants to fully recover. Butterfly bushes are among the popular shrubs that have been slow to regrow, many having died back to ground level, but new growth is beginning to sprout from the base and many of these fast-growing shrubs will regain their original stature and flower later this summer. Prolonged winter wetness may be responsible for the demise of many typically hardy perennials in poorly drained soils.

Despite these setbacks, many trees, shrubs and perennials have never appeared more robust or flowered more beautifully. Along my back walkway, a handsome specimen of Daphne Carol Mackie is smothered with sweetly scented clusters of pink and white flowers. I grow this 3-foot shrub for both its springtime fragrance and its attractive deep green foliage, with thin white margins, which persists well into winter. The majority of Daphnes are extremely aromatic. Many will produce sporadic bloom again in the fall. They prefer soils having a high humus content which is well drained and less acidic than our typical New England soils so the addition of lime is recommended as is a layer of mulch to preserve moisture as they resent dry soils. Be sure to select an appropriate location in sun or part shade when planting as they also resent being moved.

The Viburnum family offers numerous, marvelously fragrant varieties. Often referred to as the Maybush, the Koreanspice Viburnum (V. carlesii) is widely grown for its strong aroma and attractive foliage. Clusters of white flowers emerge from pink- or red-tinted buds, unveiling their sweet, spicy perfume during May. Other popular cultivars include V. Cayuga and V. Mohawk. While all members of this broad family of both deciduous and semi-evergreen shrubs are not remarkably fragrant, as a whole they are handsome, easily grown specimens which provide reliable blooms and good-looking foliage throughout the growing season. Many cultivars display extremely showy fall fruits that are favored by birds and wildlife. Adaptable to a wide range of growing conditions, they are tolerant of partial shade and thrive in moisture-retentive soils.

Perhaps my personal favorite perfume is provided by a rather coarse, suckering, deciduous shrub which is native to the US, the Carolina Allspice (Calycanthus). Planted many years ago as a tiny twig, it has matured into a sizable 8-foot shrub that greets visitors as they pass through my garden archway. During last week's heat wave, I detected its delicious fruity fragrance long before I noticed that its odd-looking, rusty red blooms had emerged. The two-inch flowers, which resemble miniature water lilies, are not particularly showy but produce a heavenly scent reminiscent of strawberries and oranges or a combination of allspice and ginger that is only noticeable during the afternoon and early evening. Carolina Allspice prefers a moisture-retentive soil in sun or dappled shade and although its heaviest bloom is during the spring, flowers continue to appear sporadically throughout the summer. The foliage turns bright yellow in autumn.

The walkway to my front entry will offer another aromatic delight for visitors in the weeks to come as the spicy, clove-scented flowers of Dianthus 'Baths Pink' unfold. Handsome additions to the front of a sunny border and favorite candidates for rock gardens, the members of the Dianthus family will soon be smothered with dozens of 1-inch flowers in shades of pink, white and red, many of them speckled, spotted, eyed, or margined in a contrasting color. Most of the perennial forms offer attractive, mat-forming, blue-green foliage that remains evergreen through the winter months. Prolonged dampness due to heavy soils, organic mulches, poor drainage or winter wetness will often cause them to succumb. Sandy, porous soils, to which lime has been added, are ideal. An established planting of Dianthus, commonly known as carnations or pinks, provides year-round beauty.

finish the Raffael's run."

Described in its press materials as featuring "five wailing women, costumes, wigs and 15 cans of hairspray," the JM version will feature a five member company of local performers bringing to life such memorable songs as "My Boyfriend's Back," "One Fine Day," "Where the Boys Are," 'Downtown," "Proud Mary," "(You Make Me Feel Like) A Natural Woman," and "Respect."

"It's a great, fun night," says McDonald. "Our cast is so tight and professional that people are going to love them and, of course, the music is some of the best around."

McDonald knows that — after enjoying Raffael's fine food — some audience members may want to head straight for the parking lot the moment they believe the show has ended. He urges them to rethink that strategy this time around.

"Everyone should be sure to stay for the curtain call. We'll be providing some additional music, just like 'Mamma Mia!,' and also a few surprises that people won't want to miss."

(JM Productions Dinner Theatre will present "Beehive" from June 4-5, 11-12, at Raffael's, 1 Enterprise Drive, North Quincy. For tickets and information, call 617-328-1600.

Former New Kid tries something new

Composer Jonathan Larson died unexpectedly of an aortic aneurysm on January 25, 1996, just hours after the final dress rehearsal for the off-Broadway opening of his musical, "Rent," and 10 days before his 36th birthday. When "Rent" later moved to Broadway, Larson earned international acclaim and was awarded the 1996 Tony Award and Pulitzer Prize posthumously for the show. It was the stuff of which legends are made. In a 1990 one-man-show, "tick, tick...BOOM!," Larson chronicled his early career struggles as a young composer about to turn 30, waiting tables while fending off a girlfriend's marriage advances, and faced with fading into oblivion. Set in 1990, "BOOM!" is now structured as a three actor show. Unlike "Rent," which is mostly sung-through, "BOOM!" is a more traditional book musical with 14 songs. Directed by Scott Schwartz and script consultation by the 2001 Pulitzer Prize Winning Playwright David Auburn ("Proof"), the show opens this week at Boston's Wilbur Theatre with former "New Kid on the Block," and Jamaica Plain native Joey McIntyre starring as the young Larson. "tick, tick...BOOM!" will be at the Wilbur Theatre, 246 Tremont Street, Boston, through June 8. For tickets and information, call 617/931-2787 or visit www.ticketmaster.com

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

TWO ARE BETTER THAN ONE

If you have a hearing loss in both ears, two hearing instruments are recommended. This provides a more natural signal to the brain, in that normal hearing involves both ears. Equal hearing in both ears helps with understanding speech and locating the source of sound. On the other hand, when one ear is amplified and the other with a hearing loss is not, it creates unequal hearing and the task of localizing sound (finding the sound source) is made more difficult. The importance of localizing sound can be demonstrated by the case of the person who crosses the street and hears a car horn. It is important to locate the direction and source of the sound to ensure safety.

Learning to hear with the assistance of hearing instruments requires practice in the beginning. Just as hearing is usually not lost overnight, it sometimes takes time to get used to hearing better through hearing instruments. We do more than just sell hearing aids here at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER. Our complete services include comprehensive testing, determining the most appropriate instrument for each patient's needs, precise fittings, and follow-up care. Located at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, we offer FREE hearing evaluations, FREE batteries for the life of any hearing instrument purchased, and FREE repairs of any make of hearing aid. Phone: 781-337-1144

P.S. It is also important to be able to localize sound when involved in conversation.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MAY 28

A Taurus moon sets a relaxed pace today. Take it slow and easy. Influences are particularly favorable for developing projects that require your imagination and creativity. Lunar alignments to Neptune, Venus and Mercury set the stage for a romantic evening.

THURSDAY, MAY 29

The next couple of days have their challenges. Resolve to maintain a peaceful, positive attitude. A lunar alignment to Mars affects this morning. Others may be irritable, aggressive, argumentative. Don't make waves. Channel energy constructively; take on a big work project and stick to it. At 11:53 a.m. the Taurus moon becomes inactive for the remainder of the day.

FRIDAY, MAY 30

At 5:32 a.m. the moon enters Gemini, beginning the final windup to a new moon. This new moon is particularly powerful, because it is accompanied by a solar eclipse. The dark side is a time for cleaning out, letting go, preparing for new starts. A lunar alignment to Uranus at 11:10 a.m. may disrupt the flow of the morning. Be flexible. Spend time alone this evening; meditate for inner peace and vision.

SATURDAY, MAY 31

Storm clouds move out, and astrological weather turns bright and sunny today. The solar eclipse-new moon culminates at 12:20 a.m., 9-degrees Gemini. The moon will continue to travel in Gemini throughout the weekend, making it prime for fun and games. Lunar alignments to Jupiter and Neptune this morning are ideal for embarking on a new adventure, travel, communications. Take a vacation from stress and worry; enjoy life to the max. There is one rough spot, however, in effect between 5:21-8:21 p.m., when the moon opposes Pluto. Keep it light and avoid touchy subjects in this period.

SUNDAY, JUNE 1, 2001

Planetary action in June offers many opportunities to initiate new ventures, develop or expand current enterprises and achieve goals. The moon continues to travel in loquacious Gemini today, highlighting social activities, communications. At 4:55 p.m. the moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. A Cancer moon takes over at 5:27 p.m. A lunar alignment to Uranus prompts you to keep your options open, go with your adventurous side this evening.

MONDAY, JUNE 2

A polarity of Jupiter and Neptune takes center stage. It adds an optimistic, upbeat mood to the day. On the other hand, this is not a time to take any kind of risk. Enjoy the show but remember that all that glitters is not gold. The moon continues to travel in the sign Cancer, making this evening ideal for sharing a special meal and spending quality time with your family.

TUESDAY, JUNE 3

After thirty years, the planet Saturn returns to the sign Cancer at 9:32 p.m. It will remain there until July 2005, bringing new challenges and responsibilities for people born under the sun sign Cancer. The moon also travels in the sign Cancer today, active until 12:27 p.m., when it interacts with Venus. Harmonious alignments of the sun to Neptune and Jupiter help to lift spirits, and prompt you to relax and enjoy life this afternoon and evening.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4

The moon enters Leo at 3:25 a.m., remaining there today and tomorrow. This is a time when creative and artistic projects will come together easily. Go with our imaginative side; be more easygoing, playful. The evening is prime for all social and romantic activities.

THURSDAY, JUNE 5

Yesterday's planetary influences are in effect today as well. A 90-degree alignment of Venus and Mars stimulates creativity and may spark romantic attractions. Keep it light; don't take anything too seriously. The Leo moon forms five major alignments to planets, setting a quick pace. Love is the name of the game this evening.

FRIDAY, JUNE 6

The planet Uranus takes the spotlight today and tomorrow. Its influence can go either way; it may bring exciting surprises or sudden reversals. Don't be rigid; relax and focus on the positives. The Leo moon becomes inactive at 2:18 a.m. until 10:51 a.m., when it enters Virgo. In addition, this moon opposes Uranus at 3:55 p.m. Spur of the moment ideas will be the most successful.

Senior housing project planned

First to use new 'overlay' district

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

A team of Cohasset residents is preparing to submit plans for what would be the first housing development under Cohasset's new senior overlay district.

David and Kelli Calhoun of Sheldon Road and Tom Ragno of Lexington — the developers of the proposed project — have purchased a 41-acre parcel of land off Beechwood Street on the east side of 3A known as the Hayes Estate. The sale is closing the third week of June and the price will become public at that time, Kelli Calhoun said.

The Calhouns and Ragno will approach the Planning Board on June 18 to file preliminary plans to build 100 to 150 units of senior housing on the property.

Because the property is within the senior overlay district, the development will be allowed to have a greater density of units than the town bylaws normally allow. In return, all of the units must be restricted to residents age 55 and older, and 25 percent of those units must be

The South Shore Music Circus will not be hosting a concert this Saturday, but there will no shortage of cheers coming from within the large tent on Sohier Street. That's because this year's seniors at Cohasset Middle High School will receive their diplomas at the Music Circus in a ceremony Saturday at 1:30 p.m..

CMHS Principal Michael Jones said the Class of 2003 would be remembered for the good example it set for others. "It's a class that's really grown into a leadership role in school."

Touching down at Deer Hill

Astronaut visits his old school

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Deer Hill school graduate and NASA astronaut, Stephen Bowen, will visit with the students of his childhood school tomorrow. Grades 4-6 will have the opportunity to meet with the mission specialist in small groups to learn about what it takes to be an astronaut and the importance of education in following your dreams.

While Bowen attended Deer Hill a little over 30 years ago, he still remembers a school project in which the class was asked to design a new stamp. His stamp featured the Apollo-Soyuz spacecraft. This was the first joint American-Soviet human space flight and it made a lasting impression on the future astronaut.

"Back then science was news, that is no longer the case today," he said. Bowen believes that growing up in the mid-70s was an inspiring time for children to branch out in their learning. He had always had an interest in science and math, but with such great scientific discoveries receiving widespread media attention, he was soon forming dreams of becoming an engineer. "There's a whole generation of engineers who grew up with that," he recalled.

Bowen's academic career may have begun in Cohasset, but after graduating from Cohasset High School in 1982, he went on to receive a bachelor of science in electrical engineering from the United States Naval Academy, and a degree in ocean engineering from the Massachusetts Institute of

Letter to MBTA about mitigation

In a show of support for their counterparts in Hingham and Scituate, Cohasset selectmen will send a letter to the MBTA expressing concern about reports the transportation agency has planned to scale back on Greenbush mitigation to save money.

Monday's discussion was in response to a letter from Hingham Selectman Melissa Tully describing a recent Boston Globe report on mega construction projects that contained the news the administration is looking for ways to build Greenbush for less than $600 million as "disturbing."

"However, we do feel this public acknowledgement provides us with the opportunity to start a grassroots campaign with our citizenry to comply with our MOU (Memorandum of Agreement). We have chosen four-quadrant gates as our lead issue," Tully wrote. "Your town may feel strongly about another issue. We feel that this is an opportune time for the towns to publicly decry the MBTA's lack of compliance."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the MBTA has so far adhered to Cohasset mitigation agreements.

"Anything we've asked for, Cashman or the MBTA has done," he said. (Cashman Balfour Beatty is the company contracted to build the railroad.) Haddad noted the MBTA has provided a temporary home for the fire department, which is renting the former Winter Garden Skating Rink site off 3A for $3,500 a month. (The property is the future site of the Cohasset train station).

Selectmen, who said reneging on any town's mitigation agreement is unacceptable, decided to write a letter to the MBTA based on observations in the Globe article.

It was also decided that selectmen Fred Koed and Michael Sullivan will continue to review the train design documents as they become available. Haddad said he would put a packet together for them. Selectman Ronnie McMorris also wanted to look into the design of the Cohasset station. She noted some other town stations are in historic districts and therefore, might be designed differently. "We might want similar design," she said.

Town Counsel seminar postponed

A seminar with Town Counsel to discuss the various issues that confront permit granting boards during the public hearing process won't be held on June 19 as tentatively planned because the Zoning Board of Appeals has hearings scheduled for that night. The seminar will include the ZBA, Planning Board, Conservation Commission, Board of Health and Selectmen. "I will try to get another date," Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen Monday.

Hingham water deal won't include North Cohasset

But municipal system to benefit

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

"The idea here is to capitalize on an opportunity to stabilize rates and continue to upgrade the system."
— Robert Kasameyer, Water Commission

In the years ahead, the Water Department may provide water to a 2,500-unit senior housing campus in off Rte. 53 in South Hingham — but it is unlikely residents in North Cohasset will be put on town water.

While selling up to 300,000 gallons a day over 20 years to the Erickson Retirement Community, dubbed "Linden Ponds," planned for Hingham would be a good financial move for the Water Department — putting North Cohasset on town water would be a drain.

Water commissioners Robert Kasameyer and Glenn Pratt explained the plans to sell water to Erickson through a three-way agreement among the Water Department, Erickson and Aquarion, a private company that serves Hingham and Hull. Aquarion also provides water to about 340 households in North Cohasset.

Kasamayer said the potential deal, which is being looked at carefully, would provide revenue to continue upgrading the Cohasset municipal water system without having to raise water rates. Hingham selectmen have written to Cohasset endorsing the sale.

To get the water to Erickson, Cohasset would physically attach to a Hingham main off Rte. 3A and the water would be "wheeled" through Hingham. In other words, adding Cohasset water at this end into the Aquarion system would provide enough Hingham water at the other end to supply Erickson. A pump station would be constructed on the Woodside Cemetery property and meters would be installed there and at Erickson to correlate and monitor the flow.

Erickson would pay for the 12-in. main 4,400 feet up Rte. 3A that would tie into the pipe near the Hingham standpipe at Cohasset Knoll. The company is also picking up the legal fees and engineering costs.

The Water Department could also connect Cohasset businesses along the state highway to the new water main that would improve fire flow in the area.

Kasamayer said the water department looked into putting North Cohasset on town water, but it is cost prohibitive and would result in having to raise rates. He estimated the cost of buying that portion of the system at $4 million.

Kasamayer explained that Erickson does have other options including the MWRA and the Taunton River plant, so Cohasset is not controlling whether the project gets built.

"It is important to know that it is somewhat competitive to supply water," he said. "It's a valuable resource and we're lucky to have it.

"We want to make sure if this goes through it is fair and not selling short the valuable resource we have."

Kasameyer said Cohasset has a yield of 3-1/2 million gallons on average per day without hurting the resource and is only using about 710,000 gallons per day on average.

He said Erickson would use the water for household purposes, so it is easier to plan the usage need. Erickson will use non-potable water for landscaping.

If the deal goes through there would be some cost to Cohasset that would be borne at the treatment plant with additional chemicals and more staff.

Selectman Tom Callahan asked that the terms of the agreement when reached be made public.

Kasameyer said the water department has nothing to hide.

"The idea here is to capitalize on an opportunity to stabilize rates and continue to upgrade the system," he said. There are still permitting issues that need to be resolved, a process that could take 12-14 months.

A 1998 Town Meeting vote set the stage for special legislation allowing the Water Department to sell town water. Pratt said talk of selling town water is nothing new. The Water Department has discussed the potential benefits of selling water as far back as 1965, he said.

There is safety in numbers

Not all houses properly marked

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

You call 9-1-1. Your address pops up on the screen and help is on its way. But valuable time is lost when the police and/or fire departments have to search for your home because there is no number on your house.

Public safety officials in Cohasset are urging everyone to install numbers on their houses and both sides of their mailboxes if they are on the street.

"Being able to find a house quickly can be a matter of life and death."
— Sgt. William Quigley

To set the right example, the Cohasset Police Department installed the number "62" on one of the columns by the front door of its headquarters at 62 Elm St. this week.

Sgt. William Quigley explained the old days when every police officer knew every house in town are past. None of the town's three new police officers live in town, for example. Newer officers may not know where "landmarks" are that no longer exist such as the Winter Garden Skating Rink, the liquor store in the cove, or Kimball's Chocolate Factory.

"People are used to saying, 'Cunningham Bridge next to the Shute property,'" says Quigley. Not everyone knows where the Shute property is, he explains.

Patrolman Lawrence Ainslie nails new numbers to the front to the police station at 62 Elm St.

In some cases police officers have had to run license plate numbers of cars in the driveway to figure out if they are at the right house, he said. Quigley said house numbers should be place in a visible spot where they can be seen from a cruiser. Reflective ones are better, he said.

Putting numbers on their houses would also insure that residents are in compliance with the "Safety and Public Order" section of the town bylaw, which states all residential structures must by equipped with street numbers either by the main entrance or near the driveway if the house is more than 100 feet from the street.

The fire department makes progress in insuring houses are properly numbered by making it a requirement when a house is inspected for smoke detectors as a result of a sale or refinancing.

"Being able to find a house quickly can be a matter of life and death," Sgt. Quigley said. "It can literally take a couple of minutes of valuable time if we end up at the wrong house.

"It's really important and not expensive," he said. Quigley said in an emergency turning house lights on for police and fire departments is also a good idea.

Elderly citizens, who need help with installing house numbers, should call the police at 781-383-1055.

COHASSET'S WEEK

All-facilities sticker won't be repealed

Over objections from Selectman Fred Koed, who was the lone voice against the new sticker, selectmen plan to stay with plans to have only one "all facilities" sticker for the RTF and beach.

Koed tried to sway his fellow board members that the new $30 stickers are unfair and place an undue burden on those who only want a beach sticker. He also pointed out for those who are over 60 — the $15 fee represents a 500 percent increase. In prior years seniors paid $3 for a beach sticker.

While the new sticker is $5 less than last year's $35 RTF stickers — residents who want more than one sticker for second or third cars to use the beach have to pay $20 for each additional sticker.

Beach stickers used to be only $7 with $3 for each additional one.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he'd received five telephone calls complaining about the all-facilities sticker.

Koed also made the argument that the beach and RTF are not related, and sticker fees for the beach should not subsidize the RTF. He noted the town does not pay to maintain the beach, which is owned by the Sandy Beach Association, only the parking lot.

Selectman Merle Brown said Cohasset sticker fees are still less than other towns.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said the basis for the change was to create efficiencies in the Town Clerk's office, and not be a revenue generator, although the new stickers are expected to raise about $8,000 more. She also said the fees will help pay for police patrols of the parking lot.

McMorris said beach stickers had cost $7 for 15 years. She noted the cost of the Recreation Department Summer Playground Program has gone from $15 to $350 in the same time period.

"Nothing you look at 15 years ago costs the same amount," she said.

Selectman Tom Callahan said the revenue side should not be understated.

"The community wants a certain level of service and we have to look at new revenue sources," he said.

made affordable.

The senior overlay district, located in residential districts B and C, was formed at Town Meeting last fall with the hopes of encouraging affordable senior housing. Once plans are submitted, the project will need approval from the Planning Board. The development will go before the Zoning Board of Appeals if zoning relief is needed. If it is close enough to wetlands, it will be reviewed by the Conservation Commission.

The Calhouns are not the only Cohasset residents involved in the proposed development. Neil Murphy of Border Street is the engineer, and Jim Sandell of Stevens Lane is the architect.

The group first approached the Planning Board in February to introduce the idea for the project. David Calhoun described the development as an upscale gated community where services like landscaping would be provided by caretakers. He estimated the market-rate units would sell for between $400,000 and $700,000. Each home, he said, would be "shingle style" and would probably have multiple units. Units would have two floors, with a master bedroom, a gourmet kitchen and a study on the first floor, and a second bathroom and a den on the second floor. Each unit would also probably have its own two-car garage.

"We're doing what everyone needs," David Calhoun told the Planning Board. "Everybody needs a place where they can eventually go, and I think it would be a great asset to the town."

Since that meeting, the Calhouns and their partners have worked to finalize their plans and complete the sale of the property.

Kelli Calhoun said they chose to go through the senior overlay district, and not apply for a comprehensive permit under Chapter 40B, because the partners wanted to work together with the town to meet its needs. If the partners had applied under Chapter 40B and were denied by the Zoning Board, they could appeal the decision to the state. It's one of the aspects of 40B that many town officials do not like.

"We prefer going through the senior overlay and working with people, instead of jamming it down people's throats," Kelli Calhoun said.

Town Planner Liz Harrington, who drafted the senior overlay district bylaw, said it encourages affordable housing just like 40B, but in a way that gives the town more control. "It's like a local version of the comprehensive permit. You have to abide by local zoning regulations," said Harrington.

The Hayes property would still be developable, however, if the plan for senior housing is rejected. Kelli Calhoun said the land could be divided into 16 individual lots or subdivided into 33 lots.

The plan for incorporating affordable housing into the development is still in the works. The affordable portion could take the form of a separate development, located on a 10-acre section of the property that has frontage on Route 3A. It is unclear whether the affordable units would be apartments or condominiums.

"We all have friends and parents who want to stay in town and can't afford to because there's nothing like this," said Kelli Calhoun.

She said the partners were still hoping sewer access might be available for the project, but they were prepared to use advanced septic systems if it were not.

She said one of the motivating factors for buying the land was to prevent a 40B project from being built there. "It was one of the last, prettiest pieces of property in town," she said. "We didn't want to see 400 apartments there, which is what could happen under a 40B."

The senior overlay district has a sunset clause, whereby the bylaw's privileges end when multi-family units make up 20 percent or more of the town's housing. According to Harrington, the town now sits at about 13 percent multi-family.

Harrington said a conflict could arise if Avalon, the proposed 200-unit apartment complex on Route 3A, would bring the town close enough to the 20 percent mark that the Calhouns' project would push it over the limit. If Avalon were approved and that were the case, the Calhouns might have to downsize their project. But, under the same scenario, if Avalon were denied and then appealed to the state (since it is a 40B project), then it is unclear whether the Calhouns would have to sideline their development until a decision is made on Avalon.

Kelli Calhoun said she and her partners plan to personally approach abutters to the Hayes property about the idea for the development in the coming weeks, as plans become finalized.

Planning Board Chairman Al Moore said he looked forward to discussing the Calhouns' project. "I'm kind of excited about the prospects of what they have in mind," he said.

The Calhouns would be the first developers to apply to build a project in the senior overlay district, but not the only ones to express interest in the idea.

The Senior Housing Committee is eyeing town-owned property behind Stop & Shop for a possible senior overlay project, and developer Wayne Sawchuk of Beechwood Street has notified the Planning Board of his desire to build senior housing on land behind Shaw's. K.S.S. Realty, a Boston-based company, approached selectmen about its interest in a senior overlay project a few months ago. The company did not own property in Cohasset at the time and has not been heard from at Town Hall since.

COHASSET'S WEEK

Sandy Beach gate

Selectmen will invite Robin Lawrence of the Sandy Beach Association to their next meeting to discuss the SBA's desire to permanently lock the gate at the far end of the beach parking lot. Currently the exit is closed from 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. If the gate were locked, all cars would have to exit at the front end of the lot. Selectman Merle Brown said there is a blind spot at the front end of the lot that poses a danger to exiting vehicles.

Meeting with Lt. Gov.

Selectmen Fred Koed, Tom Callahan and Ronnie McMorris said they would attend a special roundtable discussion to talk about local issues with Lt. Gov. Kerry Healey at 9:45 a.m., Friday, June 13 at the Rockland Trust on School Street in Brockton.

Board members sought for ConCom

There are openings on the Conservation Commission, selectmen said Monday. Interested citizens should contact the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105, or stop by the office at Town Hall.

Nothnagle on CPC

The Cohasset Housing Authority has selected Helen C. Nothnagle as its representative on the Community Preservation Committee. "The board appreciates the opportunity to participate in this particular town committee that preserves the integrity of the neighborhood," CHA executive director Marilyn A. LeBlanc wrote in a letter to selectmen.

Brush chipping

Residential brush will be accepted at the DPW parking area from 7:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. on the following Saturdays this summer: July 26, Aug. 30, Sept. 27 and Oct. 25.

No trees more than two-inches in diameter and no contractors are allowed.

Foreign objects clogging pumps

There are still many cases of foreign objects clogging sewer pumps, and this is to remind customers that only normal toilet and garbage disposer waste should be discharged. As the sewer department previously advised its users, it is necessary to charge for the Town's $85 ($100 on weekends) cost for service calls to remove foreign objects.

The following objects have caused repeated service calls: tampons, dental floss, baby wipes, Q-Tips. In addition, the following objects will also clog the pumps: bones, diapers, cloth, glass, metal, nuts, plastic, rags, rope, rubber, sand, sanitary, napkins, shells, towels.

Grant to help improve Lily Pond water quality

"The major water quality problem with Lily Pond is too much nutrients — phosphorus and nitrates — which come from runoff from lawns, septic systems, driveways, streets, and from storm-water drainage."
— John McNabb, Water Commission

The Water Commission has applied for a $246,000 state grant for a four-year project designed to reduce non-point source pollution and improve the water quality of Lily Pond, the town's primary drinking water supply.

"This project is expected to reduce nutrient loading into the Pond by over 50 percent," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission "which will help improve water quality and better protect public health."

"The major water quality problem with Lily Pond is too much nutrients — phosphorus and nitrates — which come from runoff from lawns, septic systems, driveways, streets, and from storm-water drainage," said McNabb. "This excess nutrient loading increases the growth of algae and weeds and contributes to the generation of disinfection byproducts in the drinking water.

"The project also includes the installation of a spill control facility at the intersection of Pond Street and Route 3A to protect Lily Pond from any pollution which may result from an accident at that intersection which could flow into Peppermint Brook and then right into the pond," he said.

In this project the Water Commission will design and construct storm-water control and treatment systems which will utilize structural best management practices (BMP's) and incorporate low impact development (LID) strategies wherever possible to contain and minimize off-site flows and pollutant loading into Lily Pond, McNabb said. Structural BMP improvement options to be considered will include; hooded catch basins, bioretention facilities, Rain Gardens, roadside swales with biofilters and spill containment facilities.

McNabb said the project will also incorporate pre- and post-construction environmental monitoring, on-going operation and maintenance and a public education program that will invite residents in the Lily Pond tributary to participate in reducing non-point source pollutants through the use of slow release and no/low phosphorus lawn fertilizers and through individual or neighborhood scale use of low-impact development innovative technologies designed to promote on-site retention and treatment of storm water.

The application is for a 319 Nonpoint Source Pollution Grant Program administered by the state Department of Environmental Protection under the federal EPA Section 319 program. The grant would pay for up to 60 percent, or $246,698 of the estimated total $411,163 cost of the project, with the remaining $146,163 paid for by the Water Commission out of funds appropriated at the March 29, 2003 Annual Town Meeting.

The need for this project has been established by two recent environmental studies prepared for the Water Commission – the "Surface Water Supply Protection Plan" by Norfolk Ram, and the "Lily Pond Limnology and_Waters Edge Study" by EBSR. Each of these studies were funded by $45,000 state grants, McNabb said.

Community continues to take stand against hate

Recognized for third year

As part of the recertification process, the town will also receive a $1,000 matching grant from Blue Cross Blue Shield of Massachusetts.

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

In light of its many efforts to promote understanding and respect for diversity, the town of Cohasset has once again been honored as a certified "No Place for Hate" community. The New England office of the Anti-Defamation League held an official ceremony May 28 to bestow the honor on qualifying cities which have adopted a zero tolerance policy for hate crimes, hate language, and any acts of intolerance or racism .

First recognized in 2001 this will be the third consecutive year the town has been praised for its efforts, making Cohasset one of the oldest membership groups in the Commonwealth.

The NPFH campaign was organized by the Cohasset PSO Diversity Committee, which also oversees the recertification process. In order to qualify, Cohasset has hosted a number of events, all geared toward spreading the word of acceptance and tolerance for differences in a community.

Chair of the Cohasset PSO Diversity Committee, Allison Moskow, is very proud of the efforts made since the program's inception and sees the wonderful impact it has made in town so far. Without it, students at the middle school may not have had the opportunity to participate in a variety of educational activities. Through an ADL NPFH matching grant, students were shown videos about hate crimes and taught about the Holocaust. They were asked to write essays about what they would do if they saw persecution happening in their own town. "This type of exercise is fully supported and encouraged by the staff at the schools," she said, but believes that with the curriculum requirements and funding issues, the program wouldn't have been available if it weren't for the Diversity Committee's backing.

As part of the recertification process, the town will also receive a $1,000 matching grant from Blue Cross Blue Shield of Massachusetts, which former Chair of the PSO Diversity Committee Susan Etkind said will be used to develop an "in house, anti-bullying and anti-harassment program" to be directed by school staff and aimed at both elementary and middle school students with high school students acting as peer counselors. Funding has also been given to the Cohasset Education Foundation to help aid workshops and build library resources for grades K-12.

Programs are not limited toward educating students in town. There have been many lectures and workshop training for teachers, as well as a Martin Luther King breakfast at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church and Diversity Days community events.

One very valuable training program was offered to police and fire officials on what hate crimes are and how to handle them. While the program is intended as a preventative measure, Moskow said, "the educational component has been extremely beneficial for the police department, who have had to prosecute one such crime in the last year."

With Cohasset's population becoming increasingly diverse, Moskow stresses how important it is for people to understand that hate can be shown in many different forms. "Hate can be an act as seemingly small as one person berating another's religious tradition as wrong or stupid, or as damaging as a group not taking a stand against perpetrators defacing a place of worship," she said. With the rise in diversity comes a difference in "choice of religion, family makeup, cultural traditions and languages," which can provide a wonderful place for people to learn from one another.

Through the continuing success of the NPFH program, Moskow hopes to build a community where tolerance is a minimum requirement. "Moving beyond just tolerance takes you to a place of understanding," she said. "For Cohasset to assert itself as No Place for Hate, each individual takes a stand for each individual, and that is the making of a true community."

PROJECT PLAYGROUND

Project Playground, a committee of Our World, Children's, is raising funds for a play area to be built adjacent to Our World and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Sohier Street. The playground will be open year round and free to all who visit. The playground along with the museum will be a wonderful fit with the new library and together will be an invaluable resource for our community. One of the ways Project Playground will be raising funds for this new play area is through the Brick by Brick program. Your donation of $100 to the Brick by Brick program will be recognized with an engraved brick. You can have your name, your family's name, loved one or your business name celebrated in brick. If you prefer, you also have the opportunity to donate a larger engraved paver or a beautiful hardwood bench complete with an engraved brass plate. Engraved bricks and pavers will be used in walkways and as accents throughout the surrounding areas of the playground. All funds generated by the Brick by Brick program will go directly to the designing and purchasing of play structures, landscaping of the play area and on-going maintenance. Through supporters like you, each brick, paver and bench will become a part of the playground's lasting character and serve as a permanent reminder of your commitment to this project.

For information on how to participate in the Brick by Brick program, please call Debbie Kuppens at (781) 383-6399.If you have any questions about Project Playground, or would like to make a larger contribution, please call Logan Bernstein at (781) 383-6165 or Muffy Antico at (781) 383-8303.

NDA grads start next chapter of their lives

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It rain. And it rained and rained and rained. But when the 142 members of the Notre Dame Academy Class of 2003 entered the auditorium looking lovely in their traditional white gowns – no one thought about the weather outside.

The late spring nor'easter that forced the commencement inside and challenged the sturdiest of umbrellas as hundreds of well-wishers headed from their parked cars to the Hingham school Sunday may have changed a few plans but could not dampen the pride in the packed hall.

Family members of all ages stood to applaud as the young women walked proudly down the aisles. It was their day, a day to remember always, a special time that in future years will be reflected on with happiness.

The NDA graduates include seven young women from Cohasset: Jenna Fegreus, Martha Henderson, Laura Kondrat, Rachel McElroy, Anna-Jane Murphy, Krista Nicynski and Katherine Roche.

NDA's mission is to educate young women "to pursue the opportunities of the 21st Century with competence, confidence, courage and hope."

Keynote speaker Grace Cotter Regan (NDA Class of 1978) told the graduates that life can be like the chapters of a novel that should always be a work in progress.

"Whatever your approach," she said. "It's not the beginning or the end of a chapter in your life; it is the substance of those chapters that make up your personal novel."

Regan, who is executive director of the Boston College Alumni Association, also told the graduates to "take risks; work hard and play hard.

"Make your novel interesting, juicy and fun. Leave a legacy!"

Salutatorian, Lauren Daniels of Pembroke, said her classmates were prepared to take the next step, which is not without risk.

"We will no longer have our parents to hold us back from harm's way; we will no longer have our teachers to correct our errors; we will no longer be able to blame our mistakes on immaturity," she said. "Instead we will assume the responsibility for the risks we take, the decisions we make."

Valedictorian, Kathleen Maguire of Hanover, said the graduates should not be afraid of failure.

"Falling down is acceptable, as long as we pick something up while we're down there," she said. "Our falls test our character and make us think about that which really is important to us in our daily lives.

"The obstacles make the journey unique and the journey is, after all, the most important thing in the end."

Senior awards included those for students who excelled in theology and a range of academic subjects, the fine arts and sports. The graduates received more than $6 million in scholarships and grants from colleges and various corporate and community sponsors. An impressive array of colleges accepting the graduates ranged from big schools such as Harvard, BC, BU and Georgetown, to smaller institutions like Colby, Colgate and Hamilton.

One of the commencement's highlights was presentation of the class gift – an events board for the circle in front of the school —so all students, parents and visitors will be aware of activities going on at NDA.

The graduates also each wore necklaces with gold medallions, a tradition at the Catholic girls school in Hingham. Medallions were placed around each graduate's neck by an alumna during the baccalaureate ceremony Friday night. The delicate cross links the graduate with the thousands of NDA women who have preceded her, and also serves as a reminder of the values she's learned at NDA. The school was established in 1853 by the Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur; so the Class of 2003 was the 150th to graduate. The school relocated from Roxbury to a new facility at 1073 Main St. in Hingham in 1965.

Charles David 'day of beauty' nets $12,000

On Sunday, May 4, Charles David Salon opened its doors for a "day of beauty" to benefit the South Shore Hospital's Neonatal Care Unit. "We wanted to make the most money we could to help our sick and premature babies," said co-owners, David Honeycutt and Charles Dudley. "Therefore, we offered all our services, coloring, perms, facials, as well as cuts and all retail items.

"We donated 100 percent of the revenue and our wonderful team generously gave a full day of their time as well as all their tips for the day.

"So many of our communities, businesses and individuals as well donated to the raffles. We couldn't believe the amount of food that people brought for everyone to enjoy."

"The energy was so high that we knew we would exceed our $10,000 goal but we never dreamed we'd reach $12,000," stated Honeycutt. "This is why we love the South Shore community. They always pull together for a good cause and it makes us so proud to be here."

Elena Kirkiles, chairman of the hospital's board of trustees kicked off the event with an early morning team meeting to "offer" appreciation on behalf of the hospital, Kirkiles states, "The team of Charles David are shining examples of what 'giving' means. In addition to the money that was raised, they have set the expectation and standard for the next generation for giving. They have raised awareness for our nursery and promoted much good-will on behalf of the hospital. They have no idea how much the team's generosity will help babies and touch families in so many different ways. Their compassion, caring and giving are a true testament to the wonderful people they are."

Astronaut to touch down tomorrow at Deer Hill School

Technology. He later received training in the operation of submarines, which led him to become the first submarine officer selected by NASA as a mission specialist in July 2000. He reported for training at the Johnson Space Center in August 2000, and after two years of training and evaluation, he was assigned technical duties in the Astronaut Office Station Operations Branch. Bowen will serve in technical assignments until a space flight is scheduled, but is uncertain as to when that might happen, guessing it could be "years from now" as he is "still in the middle of training."

With the busy life of an astronaut comes a small amount of down time. Bowen still has family living in the area, which he visits whenever possible. Two brothers and one sister live in Hanover, he has a brother in Belfast, Northern Ireland, and his parents have moved to Cape Cod. His sister, Patricia Fontaine is still living in the house where they grew up in Cohasset.

"It's a wonderful opportunity for kids as they approach middle school, to see the sky's the limit if you remain dedicated."
— Susan Jaffee, Deer Hill PSO

A year ago July, Bowen jogged by the Deer Hill while he was home for a visit. "It's changed quite a bit and the Osgood has moved entirely," he said.

Susan Jaffe, program director of the Deer Hill PSO is thrilled with Bowen's being able to visit. "[Astronauts] lead a very scheduled life. We feel very fortunate for him to be able to come," she said.

Bowen plans to encourage students to work hard and study hard in order to achieve their goals. He feels very fortunate to be involved with the space program and feels the breadth of his education and previous job experience have helped get him where he is. Bowen believes the more education you receive, the more doors of opportunity will open . "Don't burn bridges or do anything to close off other options," he said.

Jaffe believes Bowen's visit will be extremely beneficial for the students, particularly the fourth graders who have been studying both the solar system and the moon phases. Perhaps his visit may inspire more candidates for future space programs. "It's a wonderful opportunity for kids as they approach middle school, to see the sky's the limit if you remain dedicated," she said. "You don't need to be from a big town to make your way into something important."

Jaffe believes this will be a very positive experience for both faculty and students that will long be remembered. "It's a wonderful way to finish out our school year."

OPINION

Welcome home

Most historical societies by their very nature are focused on the past. As caretakers of local history, one would expect no different.

But here, the venerable Cohasset Historical Society is charged with an abundance of energy and enthusiasm as it looks ahead. The society's new home in the Paul Pratt Memorial Library building has provided the organization with the impetus to be creative with exhibits and displays, and to get excited about potential.

The Caleb Lothrop House, the society's former headquarters, is one of the loveliest colonial houses in town, but it didn't provide enough space for the group's many collections and artifacts. In comparison it new home — in another one of the town's historic buildings — has literally acres of space.

During the society's open house at the Pratt Building on Saturday, dozens of wide-eyed residents walked through their former library initially more in awe about how empty it appeared. As most of you know, the crowded but cozy Paul Pratt library had outgrown its home of 100 years and is now housed in the spacious, and renovated, former Osgood School building.

But the room to the left as one entered the lobby Saturday revealed an exhibit of historic signs and gowns and lots of society board members, who couldn't stop smiling as they showed visitors around.

"People that come in are so happy the building is being saved for everyone," said society co-president Paula Kozol. The building will also provide an opportunity for more community programs.

While the exhibits gave guests a taste of how the society's new home can be used to display historic treasures — much of the discussion among members and visitors was focused on the future.

Local historian David Wadsworth is compiling the necessary documentation to have the Paul Pratt building listed on the National Register of Historic Places. For Wadsworth, the work is more a labor of love. His grandfather Edward Nichols was the architect of the colonial revival building with its familiar ionic columns. And the four MacIvor Reddie murals in the rotunda were given by Charlotte Tower, his great aunt and former librarian.

The society also wants to attract more members and encourages young people to join. We wholeheartedly suggest you consider signing up if you haven't already.

For information about joining, call 781-383-1434. Or send a check to Cohasset Historical Society, PO Box 627, Cohasset, MA 02025 (Individuals $20, families $30).

Woodside Cemetery Flag Day ceremonies

In the summer of 2002 automobile dealer, Herb Chambers, donated a flag depository to the George H. Mealy Post of the American Legion in Cohasset. The purpose of the depository was to accept tattered and torn American flags for proper disposal. The depository, which is installed in front of the American Legion hall on Summer Street in Cohasset has to date, collected well in access of 100 flags. On Flag Day, Saturday, June 14 at 6 p.m. the Sons of the American Legion, Squadron 118 of Cohasset will conduct a flag burning ceremony of these flags at Woodside Cemetery in Cohasset. Additionally, the Sons will dedicate a new flagpole at the cemetery donated by the Sons. All are invited to attend for what promises to be a very patriotic and important event for the town. Veterans are encouraged to attend; there will a reception afterwards at the Legion hall. Anyone with an old flag may also bring it to the ceremony. Old flags will also continue to be accepted at the depository.

On Flag Day, Saturday, June 14 at 6 p.m. the Sons of the American Legion, Squadron 118 of Cohasset will conduct a flag burning ceremony.

Adopt a greyhound

TO THE EDITOR:

Thank you for the article about the Greyhound who has taken up residence at Sunrise Senior Living.

My wife and I have had four Greyhounds over the past number of years, and can vouch for what absolutely wonderful animals they are.

We thought that Greyhounds would be high-strung dogs that needed lots of exercise. Ditzy, our current dog, sleeps more than our cats do. She likes to go for a run here and there, but over all is content to stretch out on the couch and relax.

We had one that never did learn to negotiate stairs, but as a rule they seem to figure out post-racing life pretty quickly. They are calm animals, used to being around people and make the adjustment from track to house fast. They don't pull on the leash when you walk them, and I swear they know you bailed them out of potentially a bad situation and they show some appreciation.

Anyone looking to adopt a dog couldn't ask for a better choice. We are certainly sold on them. I hope your article inspires others to adopt a Greyhound.

Wonderful teens

TO THE EDITOR:

I had the pleasure of chaperoning the post Senior Prom party Friday night for the very first time and although I was feeling a bit tired the next morning, what a wonderful experience. The time and effort put into this event is extraordinary but, more importantly, I learned that it was the attendees that were truly remarkable. These young adults show us that there are many positive things about them and their age group despite what the prevailing wisdom. What a great bunch of polite, respectful and fun young individuals. As a parent of younger children let me take this opportunity to complement them and reiterate how proud we are of them. It was an opportunity to see Cohasset teenagers in a wonderful light.

HEALTH NOTES

What you need to know about asthma

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The disease: Asthma, a chronic airway disorder that affects people of all ages is a growing problem in America with most cases developing in the inner cities and where there is poor compliance with EPA air quality standards. An asthma attack is triggered when an allergen or other particle called a stressor enters a persons airway and triggers an immune response, producing an antibody. The antibody attaches to cells in the body which send out chemicals causing inflammation. If the inflammation is in the upper airway, runny nose or sneezing can result. Inflammation further down the airway can cause the lungs to fill with mucus, making it hard to move air in and out of the lungs. At this point, the immune response might trigger wheezing or a cough. The extreme form of this response might be suffocation caused by a restricted airway passage.

The cause: Asthma attacks can be triggered by exercise, viral infections, temperature changes, chemicals, drugs, environmental allergens, and emotions. Sorting out the precise triggers for what causes an asthma attack for any particular individual may be difficult. What we do know is that more than 90 percent of children with asthma have allergies. This means that most childhood asthmatics are sensitized to allergens (proteins which are commonly derived from natural and organic sources) very early in life. These children continue to be highly reactive to allergens throughout their lifetimes, with very few "growing out" of their allergic responses. The incidence of asthma cases related to indoor allergens appear to have increased since people now spend more time in homes which are carpeted, heated, cooled and humidified. It is difficult to control allergens in spaces where carpets (which sometimes outgas allergens); heating and cooling equipment (which need cleaning and maintenance) and humidifiers (which may breed fungus) are present. These factors coupled with getting rid of household dust (which contains dust mites), cockroaches, dander(dry skin from the coat of various animals: short for dandruff) and other suspected allergens, make the warm home a perilous place for asthma sufferers.

Diagnosing asthma: Early allergists frequently misdiagnosed asthma. I remember an anecdote about a doctor who, when seeing a client and after giving her child tests designed to identify a great diversity of Asthma triggers, was heard to say "Madam, I don't believe your child was designed for life on this planet."

The symptoms of asthma are recurrent and distressing episodes of wheezing, breathlessness, chest tightness, and nighttime or early morning coughing. Asthma is another disease which can be difficult to diagnose and differentiate from other respiratory illnesses. Children with intermittent asthma may have symptoms less than once a week which may last a few hours to a few days. With fewer episodes than twice a month, they may have nighttime symptoms and they are usually symptom free between episodes. If you suspect that anyone in your family is exhibiting symptoms, do not ignore them, but see a physician who can give a simple test for lung function which permits him to identify the disease.

Prevention: Asthma is an increasing affliction. It stands to reason that in a society where change was slow, the immune system had generations to adapt the body to conditions which people experienced. Now with modern travel, development, accretion of technology such as plastics, air conditioning, and all the rest, our immune systems are becoming overloaded by changing environments. The secret to prevention is to protect our immune systems from changes which may be a threat. Accordingly, doctors say that to prevent the onset of asthma, we should first, avoid the things that cause attacks. These so called triggers can be identified and avoided by experience. Examples of such avoidance are dust control in the bedroom where the face is in close proximity with possible allergens such as pillows, mattresses and box springs. Dust collectors are removed and air vents are covered by filters, etc. Generally, it's a bad idea to humidify air being breathed by anyone having asthmatic symptoms. Pets are sometimes a problem to asthmatics. I'm allergic to cats, and remember when I was young, I had a girlfriend whose mother had four. I would invariably visit the house and descend into fits of sneezing, coughing, wheezing, etc. The relationship was mercifully short. If an asthmatic must have a pet to which he reacts, the animal should be kept out of the bedroom.

Treatment: Although asthma can not be cured, it can be effectively controlled with most patients with the proper treatment. Two types of medication are generally used to treat asthma: Quick relief and long term preventative medication. See your health provider who can suggest a treatment strategy suitable for you.

The Board of Health has more information on asthma. Please contact us if you would like additional information on any of the items discussed here.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

The story behind the MacIvor Reddie murals that grace the Pratt rotunda

Reprinted from the Cohasset Historical Society newsletter. To join the society call 781-383-1434.

Befitting the Cohasset Historical Society's recently purchased, century-old Paul Pratt Memorial Library building at 106 South St., are four MacIvor Reddie murals on the walls of its rotunda. The murals illustrate historical subjects of Cohasset's past. The four paintings are:

- The visit of Captain John Smith to Cohasset Harbor in 1614 while on a trading voyage.
- The surveyor Joshua Fisher of Dedham making the survey of the Conahasset uplands for the Land Division of 1670.
- The local Revolutionary War heroine, Mrs. Daniel "Resolution" Tower carrying water for the corn crops during a drought "while Cohasset men were serving their country in 1778."
- A view of Cohasset Harbor showing Tower's Main Wharf during the height of the town's 19-century maritime era; and showing the mackerel schooner, "E.A. Lombard" of Tower Bros. Co. at its customary mooring just off Tower's Lumber Wharf on Border Street.

The artist, MacIvor Reddie is noted to have thoroughly researched not only the town's history, but also the buildings, tools, equipment, clothing and water craft of the several eras pictured.

Paula Kozol, left, and Sue Watrous, both of the Cohasset Historical Society, admire the sign exhibit during Saturday's open house at the Paul Pratt building, which could soon be on the National Register of Historic Places.

The artist, MacIvor Reddie is noted to have thoroughly researched not only the town's history, but also the buildings, tools, equipment, clothing and water craft of the several eras pictured. At the time of the murals, Cohasset resident Reddie had served for 10 years as head of the department of drawing and painting at the School of Practical Arts in Boston. The lettering for the murals was executed by Warren F. Clark, instructor of design and lettering at the School of Practical Arts; and the panels were put in place by George W. Flint of Cohasset. The canvas panels were permanently glued to the walls of the rotunda. The murals, given by retiring Chief Librarian, Charlotte Sophronia Tower, were first opened for public inspection on Dec. 1, 1946. The four large paintings were restored in 1993.

MacIvor Reddie was born on Jan. 4, 1889 at Long Beach, Calif. to Archibald Ferguson Reddie and Eliza Cattel Reddie, both of Philadelphia. He married Elizabeth Magoun on Nov. 3, 1936. His early education was at Cambridge Latin School and in the public schools of Valparaiso, Ind. and Eugene, Ore. Reddie's art education began at the School of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston (the Museum School) where he was a scholarship student for three years. He graduated in 1919. In the years 1918-19, he was offered a paid position as assistant to Philip Hale, teaching anatomy at the Museum School. After graduation, he became supervisor of art in the Whitman public schools for one year (1919-20) then was an assistant instructor of first-year drawing at the Museum School. From 1923-27, he was part time instructor of figure drawing and figure illustration at the School of Practical Art (now the Art Institute of Boston). During this time, he painted several murals, including a church altarpiece in St. Malachi's in New York and Jesus in the Garden at Gethsemane in a cathedral in Portland, Maine.

MacIvor Reddie returned to Boston in 1933 where he continued painting portraits, murals and giving private instruction. From 1939 to 1966 he was involved with the School of Practical Art (Institute of Boston), first as an instructor of figure drawings and illustrations, then as director, and later as vice president, heading the faculty and the educational program. Finally, he became part owner of the school.

He was a charter member, organizer and board member of the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset from 1955 to 1963 and also of several other local art centers. His life and career have been microfilmed by the Archives of American Art at the Smithsonian Institution. Reddie died suddenly in Cohasset on Nov. 7, 1966. During his lifetime, he was the recipient of awards and decorations. He had exhibits and one-man shows in numerous New England and New York festivals and galleries, including the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, the Peabody Museum in Salem (1968), the Guild of Boston Artists (1956-1966) and the South Shore Art Center (1056 to 1966). While residing in Cohasset he lived at 382 South Main St. (Biographical information courtesy of Liz Crosby.)

A major restoration of the four historical murals was accomplished in 1993 by prominent local artist, Liz Crosby of Cottage Farm Studio of Scituate and formerly of Cohasset. It was to Crosby that the Reddie family gave the task of selling the collection of MacIvor Reddie's paintings (following his widow Elizabeth's death in the 1980s) through her studio, at that time located in Cohasset. In the early 1980s, Crosby also restored the Cohasset Historical Society's collection of oil and watercolor paintings of mostly 19th-century Cohasset.

The society is currently preparing the nomination of the Pratt Building to the National Register of Historic Places.

Tea makes a comeback

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see by the papers that tea is overtaking coffee as the most popular drink among those of us who need something less than a Bloody Mary to get their juices flowing in the morning.

The Tea Council of the USA, which admittedly has an interest in seeing that we quaff more and more of the stuff, figures sales of tea have risen more than $1 billion to $5.1 billion in just the past decade.

This is a remarkable comeback for a non-alcoholic beverage that had once fallen into such ill repute in these parts that we dressed as Indians — 'scuse me, Native Americans — and tossed crates of it into Boston Harbor.

"Tea is for fun," says Susan Zuege, proprietor of the Perennial Tea Room in Seattle, a few doors down from the spot where Starbuck's opened its first coffee shop. "You should enjoy it. If you don't, you might as well do coffee."

Fun. If you ask me (and no one did) the perceived resurgence of tea-drinking in America is just another example of the feminization of the good old USA.

If you ask me the perceived resurgence of tea-drinking in America is just another example of the feminization of the good old USA.

Tea-drinking is a little old lady with blue hair sipping from bone China with a rose pattern and munching daintily on lady fingers in a tea room while spinet music plays softly in the background.

Coffee-drinking is a truck driver, preferably bald, gulping from a plain earthenware mug and chomping noisily on beef stew, while the Grateful Dead howls on the juke box in an all-night diner. I'll bet you think tea is for sissies, don't you.

Well, go into one of those new-fangled tearooms and order some and then stand back while the waitress — 'scuse me, the waitperson — reels off the menu.

There's pekoe, souchongs, congous, hyson, imperial, amoy, foochow, gunpowder, oolong right down to something called "Chinese Lychee," probably from Communist China or some terrorist nation in far away Asia.

Go into Bob's Lunch and ask for a cup of coffee and you get something that was tricked and brewed by Juan Whatsisname in Colombia, which is practically our next door neighbor.

Another strike against tea-drinking is that the folks promoting it insist that it is good for you, which has been the kiss of death for many otherwise fine foods, like my mother's favorites, spinach and cabbage.

A recent study at Brigham and Women's Hospital and Harvard Medical School showed that tea helps the body's immune system to fight infections by encouraging the white blood cells to get into the fight sooner.

If I want medicine I'll go to the drug store or the packie and pick up a bottle a gin, which, when combined with dry vermouth at a suitable ratio, forms a potent medicine indeed.

As for me, I regard tea in the same spirit as John Adams when he recorded the Boston Tea Party in his diary like this:

"This is the most magnificent movement of all! This destruction of the tea is so bold, so daring, so firm, intrepid and inflexible, and it must have so important consequences, and so lasting, that I can't but consider it as an epoch in history."

Thank you for the pre-prom party

TO THE EDITOR:

Last Friday evening's Pre-Prom Party for the Class of 2003 turned out to be a terrific event, not only for those on the way to their Prom, but for parents, family and friends, all eager to participate in the festivities. A key element to the success of the evening was the weather, which was uncharacteristically respectful of the special occasion, and held off until the Trolleys had left Cohasset.

Special thanks to Mark Haddad and the Board of Selectman for allowing us to celebrate this event on the Common, making the excitement available to many. A very special thanks to Rev. Gary Ritts who enriched the evening with his skills at the P.A. system, providing a memorable, musical backdrop to the setting. Thanks also to Erla Esposito for help with the garden arrangements, Linda Snowdale for her artistic talents, committee member Mary Beth Curry and the Pre-Prom Party Staff of Casey Anderson, Nicole Whitney, Nancy Durkin, and Merinda Lancilotti, Mr. Jack DeLorenzo and the CHS Administration.

Thanks as well to Alison Ulmer and the Post Prom Committee for the direction and support. To my husband Michael, a public thank you, for his help and patience — listening to the "plan" of the evening more than anyone should have to - and to Cosimo and Nicolas for pitching in at the last minute. Saving the best for last, particular thanks to the Stars of the Show, the Senior Class of 2003 and their guests, whose glowing smiles and appreciativeness of the evening made it so enjoyable for all of us.

Public safety concern

TO THE EDITOR:

As retired owners of Sherman Bros. Heating Fuel Oil dealership in Weymouth for 50 years, we wish to express our concern about public safety if the Greenbush train is resurrected.

State law mandates oil trucks come to a complete stop at least 50 feet before each grade-level crossing, even if a train is not coming down the track. This same law applies to school buses; however, there is no law preventing the impatiently-waiting motor vehicle driver from skirting around the fully-stopped oil truck precipitating an accident.

More than 100 fuel oil companies service this rail corridor and with 25 newly activated grade-level crossings, lives will be put at risk, hundreds of times each day. Furthermore, the frequent stopping and re-accelerating of oil trucks increases their fuel consumption which then increases company operating costs, not to mention the increase in air pollution to neighborhoods and local roadways.

The South Shore Chamber of Commerce should take note of the negative effects of Greenbush and work to relieve these dangers and costs to its oil company members.

Curb cut danger might be brewing at Tedeschi Plaza

Starbucks needs to resolve issue

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Starbucks' plans to move into the former Fleet Bank building in Tedeschi Plaza were temporarily stalled Monday when selectmen asked the coffee company to try to resolve a potential safety hazard relating to a curb cut at the site.

The grade of the driveway leading to curb cut is steep and selectmen are concerned that customers leaving the drive-through with a cup of coffee in one hand will use that egress onto Rte. 3A. They said the exit is particularly dangerous in the winter.

They also noted that Starbucks would attract more traffic flow than the bank did.

"We need to have the property owner and safety officer review that," Selectman Michael Sullivan said.

They talked about closing the curb cut, putting up some kind of barrier, or even lowering the grade — but didn't know how feasible any of those proposals might be.

Selectmen decided to hold off issuing Starbucks a common victualler (food) license until the safety issue is looked at. They invited Starbucks back to their June 17 meeting. Starbucks' plans include 22 seats indoors and some outdoor seating. It's seeking a seven-day, 5 a.m.-midnight food license.

Stephen Del Rose of Starbucks told selectmen the company needed to have all the permits in place before the landlord would allow construction to begin. Starbucks hopes to open by August.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris noted the Dunkin Donuts at the Exxon Station just up the street also has a dangerous exit onto the state highway.

Fleet vacated the freestanding, clapboard building in Tedeschi Plaza last year and moved across the street into the former Newport Creamery site.

Starbucks sells coffee and espresso beverages, along with pastries and confections, coffee-related accessories and equipment.

Starbucks Coffee Company owns Starbucks. Starbucks, which went public in 1992, does not franchise its operations. Its common stock is traded on Nasdaq under the symbol SBUX.

Tax burden makes some dream of warmer climes

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

The report MassINC put out last week ran to 64 pages but can be summed up in a sentence: "I like Massachusetts, but I can't afford to live here."

Too many residents are saying that. And lawmakers were keenly conscious of that phenomenon as the Senate worked the fiscal 2004 budget this week.

The "Pursuit of Happiness" report was based on interviews with 1,001 Bay Staters. It found a quarter of the respondents would move "if they could," which itself is a phrase to ponder. That sounds gloomy, but it turns out that half of those 25 percent would leave either because of the weather or the cost of living.

Senators would adopt a budget rider codifying Pasadena's climate if they could. But they're just state senators. So: they concentrated on the cost of living thing as they went through their budget.

Though they raised fees, raided the rainy day and other funds, and pondered expanded gambling, senators are resisting the tax option many expected them to exercise.

The lawmakers holding the line in the Senate are facing a new era of uncertainty, and we're not talking about terrorism or the mess from the burst Internet bubble. No one "in the building," as they say, knows how good a job Gov. Romney can do recruiting candidates to challenge Democrats in 2004. But everyone now knows he's serious.

Romney has been relatively passive about raising money for his own campaign fund – "only" $366,000 in the first three months of 2003. If he needs it, he'll write himself a check. But the big news is what he's doing for the party – his fundraising efforts for the state Republicans pulled in $300,000 in the first three months. That's a record.

On the other hand, every Republican governor – and they've headed the state for the last 13 years – says he's going to round up new faces and take the Republican case to the ballot box. They haven't: Senate Republicans could caucus in a Honda Odyssey.

The electoral futility is ironic for the Republicans; it's partly a sign they've got the right message and democracy is working as intended. When Democrats feel threatened by the other party, they start acting more like Republicans – cutting programs and eschewing taxes. That's what both the House and Senate are doing now: adopting most of the governor's programs and eliminating much of the spending they said must be protected at all costs when they raised taxes last year. The Democrats have plenty of resources of their own; when they sidle to the right, a centrist message and party unity tend to hold the Republicans at bay in the Legislature.

Romney's task going forward will be to translate this compliance with Republican thinking into the election of real Republicans. He needs enough candidates, dollars and voters. Those are the numbers of great concern on Beacon Hill, underneath the ones being bandied about in the Senate chamber. Romney might do well to look at the ones in the MassINC survey as well.

As usual this time of year, it was budget, budget, budget. With flat tax revenues, senators resisted adding to the budget's bottom line, but loaded up the spending plan with a series of major policy proposals that will next be subject to negotiations with the House. The policy proposals include:

— A statewide smoking ban. Sen. Stephen Tolman, D-Brighton, said that "the right to breathe clean air trumps the right to smoke." The ban applies to any workplace with more than one employee, including all restaurants and bars.

— Repeal of the 1998 voter-passed Clean Elections law. Like the smoking ban, this law was repealed on a voice vote. That sets up the likelihood that Beacon Hill legislators will ditch the controversial law without a single one taking an on-the-record vote on the issue of undoing what citizens mandated.

— Significant modifications to the English immersion law approved by voters in November. Legislators say their plan preserves two-way bilingual education and demands more accountability.

— A moratorium on charter schools, in disagreement with a House vote rejecting such a freeze.

— Preservation of the 1993 Pacheco Law. Critics say the law makes privatization of government services more difficult in Massachusetts than in any other state. The House and Senate adopted some modifications to the law.

— A ban on selling ads for junk food on school buses.

— Preservation of Evacuation Day and Bunker Hill holidays in Suffolk County. Senate President Travaglini cast the deciding vote on this issue. The Senate voted 21-18 against expanding the holidays statewide.

• House rejects primary seat belt enforcement law — On a tie vote of 73-73, representatives rejected a bill supported by the governor that would have allowed police to pull over and fine motorists who do not wear seat belts. Seat-belt use is now mandatory, but penalties can only be handed out if the driver is pulled over for something else. The debate came down to freedom

Beacon Hill Roll Call

May 26-30

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on four roll calls and local senators' votes on seven roll calls from the week of May 5-9. All Senate roll calls are on amendments to the estimated $22.5 billion fiscal 2004 state budget.

Senator Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) (617) 722-1646 Room 413F

PRIMARY ENFORCEMENT OF SEAT BELT LAW (H 2128)

House, on a tie 73-73 vote, rejected a bill providing for primary enforcement of the seat belt law by allowing police officers to issue tickets to drivers solely for not wearing seat belts. Current law permits only secondary enforcement and prohibits the $25 fine from being imposed unless the driver is stopped for another motor vehicle violation or some other offense. Other provisions of the bill include prohibiting a police officer from searching the vehicle, driver or passengers solely because of a seat belt violation and establishing a six-month grace period during which violators will receive only a warning. Supporters said secondary enforcement has not worked and noted that Massachusetts ranks 49th out of 50 states in seat belt usage with only half of Bay State residents buckling up. They said the bill contains sufficient safeguards, encourages increased usage and would annually save 19 lives, prevent thousands of serious injuries and save $160 million in medical and other costs. Some opponents said the bill is an unwarranted intrusion by the government and police into people's private lives and private cars and argued that drivers should have the freedom to decide whether they want to wear seat belts. They said the bill will allow police officers to pull over a driver if they "suspect" the driver is not wearing a seat belt and noted that police already have 1300 reasons to pull over drivers. Others noted this vague new power is tantamount to establishing roadblocks and will lead to random stops and unfair racial profiling. (A "Yea" vote is for primary enforcement of the seat belt law. A "Nay" vote is against primary enforcement)

Y

RECONSIDER DEFEAT OF PRIMARY SEAT BELT LAW (H 2128)

House 59-89, refused to reconsider the prior day's defeat of a bill providing for primary enforcement of the seat belt law. Some reconsideration supporters argued on the merits of the bill and said reconsideration would reopen debate and result in another opportunity to approve the measure. Others said reconsideration is a matter of fairness because there were 14 legislators absent for the prior vote including one supporter who was on the phone with a constituent and was denied the customary courtesy of voting a few minutes after the roll call was completed. Some reconsideration opponents simply oppose the bill and noted that rejecting reconsideration would leave the bill defeated. Others said the bill was fully debated and voted upon yesterday and argued the House should not reopen debate simply because some legislators missed the vote. Some legislators who voted for the bill on the prior roll call, voted against reconsidering its defeat on this roll call and therefore in favor of leaving the bill defeated. (A "Yea" vote is for reconsidering defeat of the seat belt bill. A "Nay" vote is against reconsidering defeat of the seat belt bill).

DRUNK DRIVING LAW (H 3873)

House 150-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the Senate a bill establishing a "per se" drunk driving law in Massachusetts. Per se is Latin for "in itself" or "intrinsically." The bill stipulates that it is illegal in and of itself for a motorist to drive with a blood alcohol content (BAC) of .08 percent or higher. Current law provides that a BAC of more than .08 is one piece of evidence of possible intoxication but leaves it up to a the court to consider that and other evidence to determine if a driver was impaired. The legislation also increases the automatic license suspension period for refusal to take a Breathalyzer test from 120 days to 180 days and reduces the period from 90 days to 30 days if the is test is taken and failed. Supporters, noting that almost half of the state's 477 traffic deaths in 2001 were alcohol-related, said Massachusetts is the only state without a per se law and noted it is time to strengthen drunk driving laws. They noted the change in license suspension periods will increase the incentive for motorists to take the Breathalyzer test. Some argued that unless the state passes a per se law by June 30, it will lose $5.4 million in federal funds in fiscal 2004 and higher amounts in each subsequent year (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

VIDEOTAPE BREATHALYZER TEST (H 3870)

House 40-109, rejected a per se drunk driving bill amendment prohibiting a Breathalyzer or blood test from being used at a suspected drunk driver's trial unless the driver was videotaped during the administration of the test and for the 20-minute period prior to it. Amendment supporters said a Breathalyzer is only a machine and noted the videotaping adds a human component to any incident. They argued it will protect the defendant and police officers by recording the condition of the defendant and reducing reliance on anyone's recollection. Some amendment opponents said the amendment will kill the intent of the per se law which is designed to get tough with drunk drivers. Others said the videotaping is an unfunded state mandate, noted communities do not have the money to fund this misguided endeavor and argued the amendment would result in many untaped Breathalyzer tests being inadmissible in court. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment requiring videotaping. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).

N

APPROVE SENATE VERSION OF FISCAL 2004 STATE BUDGET (S 2004)

Senate 34-5, approved its version of an estimated $22.5 billion fiscal 2004 state budget that does not raise taxes but raises fees and makes major cuts in many areas including human service programs, education and local aid. Other provisions include a statewide ban on smoking in workplaces, repeal of the voter-approved clean elections law, changes in the voter-approved English immersion law and a moratorium on new charter schools. Supporters said the package is a balanced one that makes tough choices in light of the state's fiscal crisis and would close the state's estimated $3 billion budget deficit. Opponents said they were pleased that the package adopts some of Governor Romney's and the Republicans' proposals but argued it still includes unnecessary spending and does not go far enough in making major changes and reforms in the structure and operation of state government. The House has approved a different version of the budget and a compromise version will be worked out by a conference committee. (A "Yea" vote is for the package A "Nay" vote is against it).

N

SUBSTITUTE ROMNEY BUDGET (H 1)

Senate 6-31, rejected an amendment to substitute Governor Romney's proposed budget in place of the one offered by the Senate Ways and Means Committee. Amendment supporters said the governor's budget is a truly balanced one that makes major changes and reforms in the structure and operation of state government. Amendment opponents said the governor has presented many versions of a budget and argued they are all unbalanced and loaded with mistakes and inconsistencies. (A "Yea" vote is for Romney's budget. A "Nay" vote is against it).

WELFARE WORK REQUIREMENTS (S 2004)

Senate 5-33, rejected an amendment striking a budget section that would allow able-bodied welfare recipients with children who are at least six years old to count education and worker training toward their 20-hour-per-week work requirement mandated under current law. The amendment also expands the current 20-hour work requirement to able-bodied welfare recipients with children between the ages of two and six. Amendment supporters said that weakening the work requirement is a step backwards in welfare reform and argued the state-funded training option would cost $7.4 million. They noted they support welfare recipients who want to voluntarily get an education as long as they also work. Amendment opponents said that Massachusetts is the only state in the nation that does not allow the education and training option. They noted the $7.4 million is a worthwhile investment because the strict work requirement often prevents many recipients from getting basic education and job training and dooms them to a life of low-paying jobs and poverty and continued support by taxpayers well in excess of the $7.4 million. They argued that expanding the requirement to recipients with pre-school children is outrageous and asked who would pay for day care for these children. (A "Yea" vote is for a 20-hour-per-week work requirement for recipients with children ages 2 and older. A "Nay" vote is for allowing education and training to count toward the 20-hour-per-week work requirement for recipients with children age six and older and is against any work requirement for recipients with children ages two to six).

DISCLOSURE BY CORPORATIONS (S 2004)

Senate 8-30, rejected an amendment striking a budget section requiring all banks, insurance companies and publicly traded corporations to annually file a report with the state disclosing extensive information from the companies' tax returns. The information would include the number of employees, gross and net income, tax liability, exemptions, deductions and credits. Amendment supporters said the disclosure requirement goes too far and noted that the state recently closed many corporate tax loopholes. They argued that the disclosure is anti-business and will discourage companies from remaining or locating in Massachusetts. Amendment opponents said that more than 109,000 companies pay only the minimum $456 annual corporate tax and argued it is time to gather detailed information to see if the state should repeal some of the tax breaks given to big corporations over the past few years. (A "Yea" vote is for striking the disclosure requirement. A "Nay" vote is against striking it and favors the disclosure requirement).

MCAS APPEAL FOR SPECIAL EDUCATION STUDENTS (S 2004)

Senate 40-0, approved an amendment providing for an expanded and more flexible appeals process for special education students who do not pass the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System (MCAS) test. Amendment supporters said the current appeals process is not fair to special needs children because they often cannot meet the standard criteria for a successful appeal. They argued the amendment maintains the current high graduation standards for special needs students but cuts them so slack by giving them more flexibility to demonstrate their accomplishments and abilities through a more flexible and fair appeals process. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment).

ADD TWO STATEWIDE LEGAL HOLIDAYS (S 2004)

Senate 18-21, rejected an amendment making Evacuation Day (March 17) and Bunker Hill Day (June 17) legal holidays throughout the state instead of just in Boston's Suffolk County as provided under current law. Some amendment supporters said it is unfair that only public employees and students in Suffolk County have these days off and argued that a statewide day off is a nice gesture in light of the salary cuts many public employees have been forced to accept. Others said the expansion would help people understand the historic significance of both days. They noted Evacuation Day celebrates a key victory for the American patriots when General George Washington and his troops drove the British out of Boston and Bunker Hill Day commemorates the important Battle of Bunker Hill. Amendment opponents said the state and local communities cannot afford to give another day off to public employees in light of the drastic cuts in the state and local budgets. Although it was not brought up on the Senate floor, it has been discussed for years that declaring March 17 as Evacuation Day is just an excuse to provide a day off to celebrate St. Patrick's Day in Boston. Some say that Mayor Curley assigned an aide to find an historical American event that occurred on St. Patrick's Day and the aide came up with Evacuation Day. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment making the two holidays legal holidays statewide. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).

N

ELIMINATE TWO LOCAL HOLIDAYS (S 2004)

Senate, on a tie 20-20 vote, rejected an amendment eliminating the Suffolk County legal holidays of Evacuation Day and Bunker Hill Day. Amendment supporters said eliminating the two holidays would save money and increase work productivity. They argued this is fair to everyone and would treat all public employees and students across the state equally. Amendment opponents said these two holidays are important events in the city of Boston and argued it is unfair and cynical to attempt to attempt to eliminate them. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment eliminating the two holidays in Suffolk County. A "Nay" vote is against eliminating them).

of choice versus public safety arguments. House members voted not to reconsider their vote Thursday. The story was punctuated by the fact that 14 House members who could have swayed the vote instead just missed the vote.

• House approves bill long sought by anti-drunk driving advocates — Representatives voted to have Massachusetts join the 49 other states and count Breathalyzer tests as proof, not just evidence, that a driver is drunk. Those "blowing" a .08 or higher would be presumed to be intoxicated and breaking the law. The Senate has not yet voted on the issue. Romney supports the bill.

• House gop leader would deny public college to terror-nation students — House Minority Leader Brad Jones, R-N. Reading, filed legislation to ban the state from providing higher education to any resident of the seven nations designated by the US as sponsors of terrorism. Jones said it doesn't make sense to devote public resources educating individuals who might want to harm the US. Critics pointed out that Albert Einstein, for example, would have been denied admission under the Jones bill; presumably Germany would have been on the state-terrorism list in 1938.

• Bishes receive support from state house community — On the third annual Missing Children's Day, with new searches under way in the Molly Bish disappearance, Lt. Gov. Healey and US Sen. Kennedy expressed sympathy, support and admiration for the Bish family, and a commitment to improving the state's response to child abduction.

• Romney will submit plan to post sex offender info — With a judge having ruled that Level Three sex offender information can't be posted online, Gov. Romney vowed to submit and advance legislation addressing constitutional issues raised by the judge's objections, so citizens can access information about offenders living in their vicinity.

• New rep takes seat — Joseph Driscoll, the Braintree Democrat who won a special election two weeks ago, took the oath of office and his seat in the Massachusetts House. Looking on was former Rep. Joseph Sullivan, D-Braintree, who now heads the State Lottery and whose seat Driscoll now fills.

POLITICAL NOTES

Prescription drugs for senior citizens

State Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D- Hingham, joined the overwhelming majority of his colleagues as the Massachusetts House of Representatives voted to protect the state's prescription drug plan for seniors. The plan had been targeted for elimination by Governor Romney and by the House Ways and Means Committee's initial budget draft.

"This is a great victory for Massachusetts Seniors," Bradley said. "As legislators we must protect the core services that government provides and that is what we have done here."

Prescription Advantage is a state program begun three years ago which offers insurance coverage for prescription drugs to all Massachusetts seniors. Eighty-one percent of its more than 82,000 members earn less than $16,668 annually for an individual or $22,452 for a married couple. In March, Governor Romney announced that he would have to eliminate the program entirely unless the federal government agreed to provide funds by June.

"Clearly, this is a program that should be federally reimbursable. However, until that occurs the state must continue this program so that seniors will have access to affordable prescription drugs," he said.

Local GOP meets June 17 in Plymouth

"How To Win in '04" is the topic as GOP leaders from Plymouth, Norfolk, Bristol and Barnstable Counties will gather and hear the "voice of the South Shore," WATD-FM President Edward F. Perry as well as Boston Globe veteran State House reporter, Carolyn Ryan. Issues surrounding the 2004 GOP elections will be discussed. The public is invited to attended this stimulating event and reservations are necessary.

"How To Win in '04" is scheduled for Tuesday, June 17 at the John Carver Inn in Plymouth. Both Perry and Ryan will be on hand to explore factors and brainstorm issues. Special guests will be congressional, legislative and county candidates. Division Five Chairman, Larry Novak announced that GOP leaders from Bristol, Barnstable, Plymouth and Norfolk will be attending this noteworthy event. Social hour begins at 6-7 p.m. and the program will begin at 8 p.m.

"This meeting is open to the public but reservations must be made," Novak said. Hedlund leads anti-fee battle

Senator Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, led the charge by securing passage of two budget provisions during the Senate budget debate to eliminate two proposed fees that would directly affect every homeowner and motorists across the Commonwealth. Hedlund filed an amendment that led to the elimination of the proposed fee on homeowners insurance. Hedlund also scored a partial victory for Massachusetts motorists through passage of his amendment which would allow for refunds on the proposed fee.

In the Fiscal Year 2004 budget, the Senate initially proposed a $25 surcharge to homeowner's insurance policies that would generate $40 million to fund "grants" to certain municipalities for emergency first responder services. Hedlund called identified this surcharge as a tax in disguise, and led an effort on behalf of homeowners to repeal this surcharge, and was ultimately successful.

"In the midst of a recession is certainly not the time to further increase the cost of living for Massachusetts homeowners," said Hedlund. "We should we seeking ways to make home ownership more affordable instead of the other way around."

The Senate also proposed a $30 fee for motorists to appeal speeding tickets in the FY 2004 budget. While Hedlund's amendment to repeal this fee was defeated, he was able to score a partial victory for motorists. This victory came about through passage of an amendment that allows for a refund of the $30 fee if the appealing authority rules in favor of the motorist.

"While I am against the creation of this fee, I am glad that the Senate allowed for some fairness with its imposition," said Hedlund.

No shortage of material for Street Law class

By John Camera
CORRESPONDENT

Teacher Jack Buckley is making sure his students at Cohasset High School are no strangers to the law.

He's accompanied them to the town's police station, to the local courts and even to a nearby prison.

Don't worry. No one is in any trouble here. The trips were part of a class Buckley teaches to sophomores, juniors and seniors called "Street Law." The class examines the legal system through field work, input from class visitors and an in-depth look at current events.

This spring, Buckley's class received a visit from Sergeant William Quigley of the Cohasset Police Department and toured the police station. Students learned how police officers enforce the law, but they also saw how police, too, must follow certain rules.

"One important thing we learned was how police go from a hunch to a probable cause, so if you're ever driving and you get pulled over, you know your rights," said junior Tony Trugly. "A lot of misconceptions we had about cops were cleared up," said sophomore Leo Clougherty. At the police station, students saw stored weapons, peeked into the closet where evidence form the past seven years is stored, and even watched a recent surveillance video that helped police nab a man who had broken into Buttonwood Books on Route 3A. The Police Department also presented the students with T-shirts.

"It's a nice opportunity for students and police officers to interact in a positive way," said Buckley, who has taught the Street Law class for five years. "It was very unexpected to receive the T-shirts. It was not only very generous, but it was a nice gesture." Earlier in the spring, Buckley took his class to the Plymouth County Correctional Facility, where students met with men who had been convicted of larceny, breaking and entering, and assault and battery.

"They all admitted what they did was wrong," said Trugly. "One of them said he wasn't guilty for the crime that he did but he was guilty of hanging around a gang. Most of them said they had a history of using drugs and a tough family life growing up." In March, the Street Law class sat in on hearings at Hingham and Quincy District Courts.

"When we were in court, you could see the judges clearly talking about constitutional rights, so that piece of paper scratched out more than 2000 years ago really means something," said Buckley.

The students hosted two mock trials where they acted out the roles of lawyers, judge, jury, defendant and plaintiff. One scenario involved a criminal trial where the jury had to decide whether a drunken driver was guilty of manslaughter or murder. Another was a civil trial over a man accused of deliberately having sex with someone to give them AIDS. Students said the experience of the mock trials was valuable, but it also taught them that real trials aren't quite as dramatic as they are on television or in the movies. Aside from teaching about how laws are enforced and how criminals are punished, Buckley also teaches his students how laws are made. On Friday, Buckley used an article from the previous day's newspaper to illustrate the legislative process.

Students learned about a bill that is being hotly debated in the Statehouse that would allow police to pull motorists over for not wearing seatbelts. Buckley outlined different groups, like lobbyists and constituents, who tried to influence legislators' decisions about laws. He explained the path a bill could take once it was drafted, eventually dying, becoming law, or being rewritten and debated over again. "It's a really difficult process," Buckley told his students.

In a class about law, current events provide Buckley with endless topics of discussion. The class has closely followed stories like the War in Iraq, the deadly Rhode Island nightclub fire, and the Harvard graduate student accused of murder. "There are lot of examples where you can make connections between academic topics and current events," said Buckley. "In that sense, there's no shortage of material." The Street Law class has encouraged many students to pursue careers that involve law.

"It kind of sparked my interest in politics and lawyers," said junior Jeff Barrett, whose father is a judge.

Barrett, like other students in the class, also has a newfound respect for police. He's planning to do a ride-a-long with a Cohasset police officer later this spring. Junior Ian Hickey said he is considering a career as a policeman as well. "If I can't be a teacher, I'm going to be a cop," he said.

Graduation or All-States?

Krupczak and Kidder must decide: caps & gowns or shorts & cleats

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Last Saturday was a historic day for the Cohasset High track program, and this Saturday should have been even better…if only it wasn't for those damned MIAA schedule makers.

Every spring, there are a number of senior high school track stars who have to choose between graduation and their shot at postseason glory, and it is simply not fair.

Last spring, DaviAnn Brown had to choose between graduating from Silver Lake with her classmates and lifelong friends or trying to defend her New England 400-meter championship. The current Northeastern track standout chose the former course.

This Saturday, that same kind of choice falls to Cohasset High seniors Brian Krupczak and Ian Kidder. Both senior captains fared quite well at this past Saturday's Class D state meet at Norwell High, Jared finishing third in the 200-meter sprint with a season best 23.31 run despite a sore hamstring and Kidder taking fourth in the javelin (163-07)—both thereby qualifying for this Saturday's All-State meet, which is being held right back at Norwell High.

The "K boys" were also part of the 4x100-meter relay team that took third place overall, so they are eligible to compete in that event as well with sophomore Peter Bunstein and junior Eric Belz. CHS graduation is scheduled for 1:30 p.m., the 4x100 relay around 1:00. Even though it is only a 10-15 minute drive between venues, it seems unlikely Krupczak and Kidder could do both. The matter, of course, is complicated by the fact that, if Kidder and Krupczak don't run, Bunstein and Belz also lose their chance to compete.

Veteran CHS track coach Al LaFountain, to his credit, has

Sophomore catcher Louis Blanco is one of the big reasons it is hoped the Cohasset High baseball team will make a run at its first state tourney berth in many years next spring. See next week's Mariner for the CHS baseball season wrap-up.

Laxmen's glass is half-full

Skippers begin postseason play after two week layoff

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Kevin Orcutt is choosing to see the glass as half full.

When his Cohasset High boys lacrosse team took to the field yesterday afternoon (after Mariner press time) for a first round tourney match-up against Tri-County, this was the first real game action the lads had seen in exactly two weeks. The Skippers wrapped up their best ever 15-1 regular season with a 14-7 win over Canton on May 21 and got the extended layoff by virtue of earning the top seed in the Div. 3 state tourney and the first round bye that went along with it.

Now many coaches would see this lengthy removal from on-field battle as a negative, but Orcutt actually sounds sincere when he asserts it could be a positive for his team.

First off, the CHS prom and many other end of the school year events have taken place over the last week, so he did not have to concern himself with those "distractions."

More importantly, though, at least in the third year coach's mind, is that this has given his undermanned team a chance to rest up and recover from the assorted bumps and bruises which never really seem to go away during the season.

"We've got to win three games to win the (Div. 3 Eastern Mass) championship, and we've had a chance to heal up some the last few weeks," reported Orcutt. "The two weeks off isn't a perfect situation, but I'm not complaining. We don't have a lot of depth, so I'm looking at this as a positive."

Orcutt admitted that his charges appeared "a little flat" at practices last week, but noted they were "cranking it back up" at Monday's workout, two days

Div. 2 South Sectional Finals
Cohasset vs. Bourne
Hingham High, Friday 4 p.m.

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

And the quest continues.

Riding high on a 19 match win streak, the tennis Lady Skippers extended their season into the South Sectional finals to be played tomorrow (Friday) at Hingham High (4 p.m. start).

"I feel like we are peaking at the right time," said veteran coach Sarah Meehan of her team. "There's been some good competitive matches so far."

Cohasset, with a 16-0 regular season record that featured a South Shore League title and victories over Div. 1 squads, received the number two seed after a coin flip gave the similarly successful squad from Bourne the top berth. After a preliminary round bye, Cohasset proceeded to beat Norwell in the opening round, Hingham in the quarterfinals, and Canton on Tuesday to earn a spot in the championships. They

Lady laxers ousted

Higher seeded Milton too much for Cohasset girls

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset lady laxers took an early exit from the postseason last Thursday, dropping their preliminary round game to Milton, 16-11.

The girls on the team showed great heart all season, grinding out tough games against much bigger teams in higher divisions. The heart that they displayed in the regular season certainly carried over into tournament play, but the effort put forth by the Lady Skippers was, unfortunately, not enough to advance to the next round.

"Milton just played a better game," conceded senior captain Maura McKenney, the top scorer on the team. "But we didn't give up. And that's what is important, not just for this season, but in setting the tone for the team next year."

Cohasset had the makings for an upset, with junior defenseman Ashley Faber scoring twice on penalty shots to open the game at a 2-0 advantage for the visiting Cohasset squad.

However, the 16th seeded Milton team, hosting the 22nd seeded Cohasset (7-7-2 on the year) ran off six goals in a row in a deflating sequence for the visitors.

However, Cohasset refused to lay down, scratching back to 6-6 on the strength of goals by senior captain Katherine Coyne, junior Nicole Turgiss, and junior Jessie Guild, who made a terrific rebound play off Turgiss' penalty shot. Milton staved off the comeback with two quick strikes before the end of the half to take an 8-6 advantage at the break.

The two-goal deficit was the closest Cohasset would come the rest of the way, as Milton built leads of 12-7 and then 16-9 before the game was finally sealed.

Cohasset junior Jenn Buckley (#396) finished just one spot short of qualifying for the All-State meet in this race, the 1-mile at Saturday's state class meet, but bounced back to help lead the 4x800 relay team to third place finish and a spot at All-States.

Graduation or All-States?

not tried to influence his seniors on their decision, a decision with which both young men appear to be struggling.

"It's such a tough position to be put in," said Krupczak, who has previously beaten both of the runners who finished ahead of him on Saturday "and I probably won't make the decision until Saturday. I'll probably take into consideration how my leg's feeling, where I'm ranked (for the race) and then at everything else, and make a decision."

A group of track parents, fearing exactly what has happened, sought several months back to postpone Cohasset graduation until this coming Sunday. However, according to Krupczak, school officials refused to bend.

Kidder will likely be able to throw the javelin, as that is a morning event. Krupczak, though, may also miss the 200-meter race, slated for early afternoon, if he opts for graduation ceremonies.

Sans this ongoing drama, the story of Saturday's Class meet could not have been much happier for the Cohasset High tracksters.

The girls 4x800 relay team also qualified for All-States with a third place finish, and sophomore Mary Silvia stunned many with a second place finish in the 800 with a finish of 2:24.38. Silvia finished behind only Weston sophomore Allison Ritter, who the week before had won the South Shore Principals' Meet.

"Mary is one of those athletes who has done everything we've asked of her this year, and she's done it all extremely well," said LaFountain. "I'm extremely happy for her. I think she has a legitimate shot to finish high at All-States too."

The girls 4x800 team of Silvia, Jenn Buckley, Nicole Whitney and Lisa Musto ran a season best 10:17.55, shaving nearly 2.5 seconds off it's previous best time to take third place and advance on to All-States. The team was ranked 17th heading into their heat, but Buckley got out to a great start, handing off the baton in first place, and Whitney and Musto also had great legs. Fortunately, none of these girls are seniors.

The high placement was particularly gratifying for Buckley. The junior star also competed in two solo events on Saturday, the javelin and 1-mile race, and it was felt she had a legitimate shot at qualifying for All-States in both. She fell four spots short of qualifying in the javelin (8th place, 100-feet, 9-inches), but just one spot and a mere 0.96 seconds shy of qualifying in the mile, her season best race of 5:29.69 still leaving her just off the pace of fourth place finisher Kylynn McKinley (5:28.73), of Marblehead.

"Jenn was pretty disappointed after the mile race, so to come back and be a part of the 4x8 team that will go to All-States was a big lift for her," reported LaFountain, who is in his fifth year of coaching both the girls and boys track teams.

Senior La'Raine Langford, running on just a few hours sleep (the CHS prom was held the night before), ended her top notch track career with an 11th place finish in the 110-meter hurdles (17.67 seconds) and by leading the 4x100 relay team to a respectable 18th place finish (55.58 seconds). The other members of the 4x1 team were junior Elisa Jerome, sophomore Lindsey Kennedy and freshman Allison Krupczak.

Whitney took a 12th in the 400, topping her season best time by a quarter-second with a 1:02.75, and Belz was 19th in the 100, his 12.02 second run well off his season best mark of 11.6.

Cohasset had one of the smallest rosters of any team that competed at the Class D meet, with just 11 boys and the bare minimum of eight girls for the season, which made their final placements of 12th by the boys and 13th by the girls in their respective thirtysomething-team fields all the more impressive.

Council rejects metal bat ban

By Dan Ventura
BOSTON HERALD STAFF

FRANKLIN - Wood might be good in the eyes of some, but the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Council isn't ready to put the pedal to the metal bats. After a long and exhaustive session, the MIAC voted 12-5 to reject a proposed rule change which called for wood bats to be used in all high school baseball games in 2004, allowing leagues to retain the right to use wood or metal bats during the regular season.

The vote doesn't pertain to the tournament, since the MIAA Baseball Committee is currently the only group authorized to dictate which bat is to be used in the postseason. That committee will not meet again until October. "We're happy that the MIAC voted that way, but I am still not satisfied," said North Reading coach Frank Carey. "I want to know who is running the show here. I want to know why the MIAC doesn't have the authority (to mandate which bats should be used in the tourney) and I'm disappointed that no one from the MIAA took the lead in this." The tournament issue isn't a done deal just yet. According to several sources, certain schools who used metal bats during the season are looking into the possibility of filing an injunction just before the start of the tournament to force the MIAA to adopt the pro-choice stance of the MIAC. "I wouldn't go that far myself," said Stoughton coach Bob Ashley, the president of the Massachusetts Baseball Coaches Association. "I wouldn't want to be known as the person who held up the tournament. I don't think it would be fair to the kids and I've always considered myself a fair person." Fairness is what the MBCA has been looking for from the moment the MIAA Baseball Committee voted last October to make wooden bats mandatory for the 2003 state tournament with a long-range goal of eliminating the aluminum bats. Longtime Reading baseball coach Peter Moscariello feels yesterday's vote is another step in the right direction. "I'm satisfied and pleased that the MIAC considered the facts and considered the actions of the other boards," said Moscariello. "We appreciate the process and we're pleased that leagues and schools still have the same choice they've had for 30 years. "Hopefully this vote puts the issue of bats in the regular season to an end. Now we would like the Baseball Committee to revisit the issue as soon as possible and revert back to allowing league choice. I think it would be foolish and irresponsible for them not to do so." The head of that committee is Brockton athletic director Tom Pileski. Along with the likes of Harvard baseball coach Joe Walsh and South sectional tournament director Don Fredericks, Pileski - urged the MIAC to make Massachusetts the first state in the country to ban metal bats. "Change is difficult, change is slow," said Pileski, who refused to be discouraged by yesterday's vote. "I think educating the masses is the most important thing and we've gotten the point across to a number of leagues who espouse the wooden bats. "The unfortunate thing is that many people on these committees, in justice to them, don't have the time or the means to do the research that many of us have done. A lot of this is confusion more than anything else and rather than take a chance, they would vote to stay with the status quo." The MIAC also voted 14-3 to reject a proposal that called for a ban on boys participating in any girls' contact sports. In making its decision, the MIAC was aware that the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court had ruled that the Equal Rights Amendment of the Massachusetts Constitution precludes the MIAA from making such "gender-based distinctions." Several subsequent Superior Court cases also found against the MIAA whenever it attempted to limit the participation of boys on traditional girls teams.

prior to the Tri-County clash.

"It was a good practice (Monday)," he reported. "The guys look like they're putting their game faces on again."

One player who Orcutt knew would not be ready for yesterday's game was senior captain Matt Davis, arguably the team's top overall player. The star middie may be able to return from an injury that has kept him out the last few weeks in time for the Eastern Mass finals, tentatively scheduled for next Thursday, but that is far from certain.

"I'd like to see Matt return more for himself than the team at this point," said Orcutt. "I just feel so bad for him. He's been such a mainstay and such an important part of this program. If we're playing for a championship, it would be great if he could be on the field."

It hasn't been easy for the Skippers to compensate for the loss of Davis, a gifted two-way player who quarterbacks the offense. Fortunately, a couple of players have stepped up their level of play and involvement in the absence of the captain— most notably seniors John Durkin and Robert Hickey, according to the coach— and Orcutt is expecting a few more to do so now that the postseason is upon them.

Orcutt is also encouraged by the way his defenders and junior goalie Nick Murphy have played of late.

"Nick has been there every game to do a solid job, making the saves he's supposed to," said Orcutt, "and sometimes he'll surprise you too, and come up with a big save that helps turn momentum."

Tri-County, seeded eighth in the 14 team Div. 3 field, advanced to face Cohasset by besting ninth seeded Minuteman Regional on Saturday, 16-4.

Cohasset, assured of home field advantage throughout the Eastern Mass playoffs, will face either fourth seeded Weston or fifth seeded Ipswich in the semifinals (likely next Tuesday) if they've beaten Tri-County.

Second seeded Martha's Vineyard, Hopkinton (10th seed), Medfield (third seed) and Dover-Sherborn (sixth seed) were the teams remaining on the other side of the bracket at the time of this writing.

"I like our chances of making it to the finals and doing well there too," concluded Orcutt. "I've got some talented kids on this team, and a good number of tough kids too."

2nd annual Clark Chatteron Fund Run June 14

The second annual Clark Chatterton Fund Run has been scheduled for next Saturday, June 14. There will be a 3.5 mile walk and a kid's "fun run" at 9:30, followed by the 3.5-mile run at 10 a.m.. The race starts and ends at the Music Circus on Sohier Street, and will take runners by Cohasset Common, past Sandy Beach, up Nichols Road and then by the Chatterton house as they loop back toward the Music Circus finish line.

Any questions can be directed to Cohasset High Atheltic Director Ron Ford (781-383-6103).

Cohasset Family Lax Day and Youth Night

The Cohasset Lacrosse Boosters will be holding their annual Family Lax Day for all players, parents, and fans of youth lacrosse on Father's Day, Sunday June 15th at Miliken Field from 12 - 5PM. Last year's inaugural event was a great time for everyone and this year promises to be even bigger and better as we will be including the girls youth program and incorporating the HS Alumni game into the festivities. The best BBQ and buffet in town, visits from the Boston Cannons, camp raffles, t-shirt and hat sales, and special attractions for all ages; will provide a perfect backdrop for a full day of match-ups featuring head-to-head competition between the teams at each age level for this year's bragging rights. The games are always a thrilling way to close out our Spring season so mark your calendars as we look forward to seeing everyone in the lacrosse community for a great day of fun and excitement to celebrate another fantastic season of youth lacrosse in Cohasset.

Also, congratulations to our High School Varsity team for getting the top seed in their State Championship drive and in securing home field advantage throughout the playoffs!

As part of their march to victory, the Boosters will also be hosting Youth Night during the first game of the playoffs (currently scheduled for June 4th). All Cohasset Youth lax players that attend wearing their playing jerseys will receive free pizza and soda in addition to seeing some great lacrosse action by their hometown heroes, so come on out and cheer our boys onto the next round and then to the Championship!

HINGHAM — The rights of summer for so many young baseball players — South Shore Baseball Club's annual summer camps - is on deck in Cohasset, Braintree and Hingham.

Open to players from any city or town, SSBC's 2003 one-week camps for boys and girls, ages 5-12, are scheduled for June 23-27 Hollingsworth Park in Braintree and Miliken Field in Cohasset. Four one-week camps for players 5-15 are slated July 7-August 1 at Hingham High School. Campers may attend as few as one or as many as four weeks at Hingham

"We have great facilities," SSBC president/director Frank Niles, Jr. said. "Every camper will enjoy a valuable and rewarding experience at any of the SSBC summer camps. Our expert staff of qualified professionals will help these kids improve their skills and enjoy the great game of baseball."

All campers will be grouped according to age, ability, physical maturity and previous experience. Instructions will range from basic fundamentals to advanced skills. Each camper will play a minimum of one game per day.

Individual attention will be emphasized in all aspects of baseball. Pitching, catching, defense, base running, and hitting will be featured in special sessions and lectures. Any camper needing specific areas of improvement will receive special attention from SSBC's expert staff of professional coaches.

All camp sessions are held Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m.-2:30 p.m., rain or shine. Half-day sessions will be available for 5 through 7 year olds.

keep the game close, tallying four of the team's 11 goals. Faber added another goal late in the game to complete a hat trick, while McKenney finished with two goals. Sophomore Lauren Rizzotti scored the last goal of the game to account for the final score.

Milton was led by senior sniper Megan Tilley, a quick forward with good hands who scored a game-high six goals.

Though the season ended sooner than the team members would have liked, they are keeping their heads up for 2004, where some will take lacrosse to the college level, while others will hope to continue the success started this season.

"Our skill and unity helped us make it through the season," said Guild, who toughed out a concussion to play in the game. "And next year, we are hoping to make it even further."

will now meet the winner of today's Bourne (18-0)-Dover-Sherborn (13-5) match tomorrow.

Though the Skippers have never captured a Sectional title, Meehan insists that her team prepare for the matches deep in the same way that they would gear up for any other of their wins this year.

"I give them the same speech before every game," started the 11th year coach. "I tell them 'This is the most important match of your careers.'"

Meeting Norwell in the opening round, a team Cohasset had beaten twice in regular season play, Cohasset welcomed back number one singles player Liz Stone from her ankle injury to take the match cleanly, 4-1.

Stone had a brilliant week of match play at the top spot, defeating three highly regarded singles players in as many tries after missing a significant chunk of the end of the regular season. Stone beat junior Angie Bizzozero of Norwell by a surprising score of 6-0, 6-0 in her first match back. On Monday, Stone took on her former hitting partner from the Weymouth Club, the heavy hitting sophomore Megan Doyle. Doyle jumped to a 3-2 lead before Stone gained too much momentum with her play, and walked away with a 7-5, 6-2 straight sets victory.

Stone beat Canton's ace, junior Marie Sofolosky on Tuesday 6-1, 6-3 for the semifinal 4-1 team win. While the score may indicate a blowout, this was quite possibly her most impressive win of the playoff run. Sofolosky was clearly coached to draw Stone from her powerful play, utilizing an array of drop shots, off-speed ground strokes and looping top spin shots to the baseline. However, Stone managed to maintain her composure to ensure the win.

"She usually hits really hard," noted Stone after the 97 minute match. "You just have to stay in the point and not let it bother you."

Senior captain Lindsay Grossman also went 3-0 at second singles, not dropping so much as a set over the likes of Meg Kelly, Diana Trevino and Vaneeda Contracul. Grossman won promptly over Norwell and Hingham by the matching scores of 6-2, 6-1. Against Canton, she was met with the free-swinging Contracul, who gave the home senior some trouble in the early going, but Grossman prevailed 7-5, 6-4.

Junior Holly Graham overcame an opening round loss at third singles to Norwell's Kate Mulvaney to capture her position's point over the next two opponents. Graham beat Hingham's Jamie Landers 6-0, 6-2 and Canton's Susan Bondrick by a score of 6-1, 6-3.

Senior captain Julie Shea and junior Courtney Caron continued their phenomenal season at first doubles with a triad of wins to start the postseason. The pair dispatched their Canton and Norwell counterparts with the relative ease Skipper fans saw in the regular season, but found a challenge in the Harborwomen's duo of Molly Williams and Kristin Garrity.

Down 1-5 in the first set, Caron and Shea re-grouped for a ferocious comeback, eventually winning 7-5, 6-4. Despite their early troubles, losing at the same time Stone found herself in her only deficit thus far, Meehan maintains she was anything but worried.

"They are very slow starters," said Meehan of her first doubles team, a tandem that has come back to win multiple matches this year after losing the first set. "They will crawl back into it. They know how to win."

The second doubles pair of juniors, Corey Evans and Emilie Sullivan, won their opening two matches, and fell to Canton's very impressive squad, seniors Lindsay Carlson and Mary Bustin. Still, Evans and Sullivan won handily over Norwell and Hingham, providing Cohasset with the crucial doubles points to advance.

The Cohasset girls' U-12 "J" Division spring travel soccer team.

U12 booters still kicking up a storm

It was a tough 2002 season for the girls' U-12 "J" division spring travel soccer team. Despite their great heart and the willing support of parents and coaches, they just couldn't bring home a win. Game after game that winning forward pass, or that on-target shot for goal failed to materialize and the girls could only watch as the opposing center forward hit home her third or fourth or even fifth shot of the game.

They didn't win, they often lost badly, but what they did bring home every week was a wining attitude. No tantrums, no blaming the "ref", no drop-outs and a great team spirit.

It was this spirit – encouraged and exemplified by the coaches, John Dunn and Doug Fitts - that carried them through a season that produced great soccer and a well-earned place in the playoffs.

Doug and John had clearly put the girls through their paces. Passing, controlling the ball, the "both feet on the ground" throw-in, even understanding the dreaded "off-side" rule, had all been established.

You could watch the girls hold their position on the field – no longer the "hunting in groups" strategy. And you could see them extending themselves to excel in those positions. Forwards making sweeping passes to their wing – building an attack; defenders sticking like glue to their opponents; midfield players winning in the race for a stray pass, intercepting the dangerous advance. And, in goal, Brittany Dunn, Lauren Mack or Margaret Goodwin, diving at the feet of the advancing center-forward to safely retrieve the ball, and clearing with confident, accurate goal kicks.

As the season advanced and, with several wins under their belt, these basics became a consistent part of the game and then the girls, if you'll excuse the expression, "kicked it up a notch"! Now we saw forwards run with real focus and aggression, midfielders getting into perfect positions to receive the throw-in, already on its way from an urgent defender, and defenders taking the time to stop and control the ball, never mind the advancing hoards from Hingham or Hanover.

One of the highlights of the season was their last game against Hingham, ironically not a win for Cohasset, but a game played with such courage, spirit and focus right to the last whistle, that the final 2-1 score seemed almost irrelevant.

Cohasset went into their final game, against Carver, on Saturday, knowing that they had more than exceeded expectations and were still in contention for a place in the playoffs. The odds were not good, but with one more win and a draw from the Hanover/Hingham game, they would do it.

The seven-nil victory against Carver was in the bag before lunch and all that was left to do was wait it out until the remaining games were completed. Remarkably, within the hour the Hingham/Hanover game ended in a draw and Cohasset's under 12 girls were through to the playoffs. The girls will play their first game against Pembroke on Saturday.

Whatever the outcome of the weekend play, both the team members and the coaches deserve our congratulations. Much credit should go to Doug Fitts and John Dunn for their great coaching. They have encouraged these girls to give their best at every game and have worked with them to develop their individual and team skills. They have also encouraged good sportsmanship – or sportswomanship, and an excellent attitude to the game.

This may be the last year these girls play together as a team, they may not even play soccer again, and they probably will never "Bend it Like Beckham", but they'll have great memories of a wonderful year when they committed themselves to their team and to playing a great game and they came out on top.

BAND CONCERTS

During the past 11 seasons, concert funding has been provided through the generosity of the South Shore Playhouse Associates Inc. Each June the Board of Directors of the South Shore Music Circus takes under consideration the request of the Recreation Commission for concert funding, hence, certainty of concerts are not absolute until mid-June, each season. The SSMC donations are matched by a grant from the American Federation of Musicians, N.Y.C.

Based upon continued SSMC funding, the schedule for the 2003 season is as follows:

Tuesday, July 1, 7:30 p.m., Town Common

Tuesday, July 15, 7:30 p.m., Town Common

Performances will be by the 30-piece South Shore Concert Band under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh. Concerts are held on the Cohasset Common, are free of charge and the public is invited. It is a good idea to bring either lawn chairs or blankets to sit on, and from time to time, insect repellent is a good item to have available. You may call the Recreation office at 781-383-4109 to check on the status of concerts should you be in doubt as to weather conditions.

DOG OBEDIENCE CLASSES

The Cohasset Recreation Department will continuously throughout the summer offer dog obedience classes taught by Happy-Dog Training School. Classes will be held Monday evenings on the Town Common, Cohasset. Second session starts Monday, June 9, for obedience with distractions at 6 p.m. and 7 p.m. for beginners.

For both the beginner class and the obedience with distractions class, dog owners are required to have their dogs' shots/inoculations up to date. Class times are 6 to 7 p.m. and 7 to 8 p.m.

The beginner class will teach basic obedience and responsible ownership to novice pet owners. Helpful hints on ownership, voice directions, basic commands and exercises beneficial to those thinking about eventually showing their dog, will be included. The intermediate/advanced class is designed for dogs that have completed the Recreation Department beginner class. For all classes the fee is $100 for the five-week, one-hour-per-week program.

To register for the next available session, call the Recreation office at 781-383-4109. A new session will begin approximately every five weeks. Classes are limited in size and participants will be accepted on a first-call, first-enrolled basis.

New England Friends Home celebrates centennial year

The New England Friends Home, Turkey Hill Lane, Hingham celebrates in 2003, 100 years of service to senior citizens. The public is invited to a Celebration Reception on Sunday, June 8 from 1-4 p.m. Visitors may tour the home, the landscaped grounds and the neighboring farm, which is maintained by the Trustees of Reservations.

Now located at Thayer House in Hingham, the home was not originally located there. The Huntington-Dixon home in Amesbury was the location of the New England Friends' Home for its first 55 years. Sarah Nichols Pope Dixon, in her 1866 will, left her estate to the New England Yearly Meeting of Friends to provide for the acquisition and suitable endowment for a "Home for Unmarried Women Friends who devoted most of their lives to teaching." A committee was gathered and Sarah's final wishes were formulated in 1903 with a home formed from the generous gift of property by the Huntington family in Amesbury. Starting in 1904, the New England Yearly Meeting of Friends operated a "rest home for the elderly" in Amesbury, a town having very close associations with John Greenleaf Whittier, the Quaker poet and writer. Various endowments from Quaker sources supported the home, which was open to people of all faiths.

In the late 1950s, the home in Amesbury was found to be no longer in compliance with updated state safety regulations and notice was given that it would have to close. It should be noted that at that time, weekly room and board rates had just been raised to $17 for Friends and $20 for non-Friends.

In 1958, the New England Society of Friends was the beneficiary of another generous gift — this time from the Thayer family of Hingham, when Polly Thayer Starr offered the Thayer home on Turkey Hill to become the New England Friends' Home.

The Huntington-Dixon home in Amesbury was the location of the New England Friends' Home for its first 55 years.

Ezra Ripley Thayer, Mrs. Starr's father, was a prominent Boston lawyer, a professor and dean at Harvard Law School. Born in Milton, he was the son of James Bradley Thayer, also a distinguished legal scholar and professor at Harvard Law School. Early in the 1900s, when Ezra Thayer and Ethel Randolph Clark had married and rented a house in Cohasset, they used to enjoy horseback rides on Turkey Hill. They were attracted to the area and bought a small farm on East Street in 1904. During the succeeding years, the Thayers bought up various lots, extending their holdings as far as Turkey Hill Lane. Between 1910 and 1912, they erected a large, shingled house on the location the present house was built along the same lines. Blue tiles in the dining room and Whittier Room, carved woodwork from England for the library fireplace, and statuettes from other European countries. The camel statues at the bottom of the drive to the farmhouse and some stone peacocks and pheasants were brought from the San Francisco World's Fair of 1935.

After the death of her mother, Polly Thayer Starr inherited the Thayer home and it was at this time she gave the home to the Society of Friends. Upon accepting the gift from Mrs. Starr, the New England Yearly Meeting raised $100,000 to renovate the home for senior living; it opened for occupancy in February 1962 to 13 residents. In 1997, the Home Committee conducted a capital campaign to renovate and expand the home, which now accommodates 18 residents. Today, the red brick Georgian-style residence stands at the top of Turkey Hill overlooking the farm below and with views of Hingham Bay and Boston Harbor.

In honor of John Greenleaf Whittier, one of the parlors is named the Whittier Room. It contains artifacts and pictures brought to Hingham from the Amesbury home.

While preference is still given to Quakers, the home is open to individuals of all faiths. The Thayer House is a facility whose sole purpose is to help healthy, independent seniors remain that way. It is not a nursing home but carries a license as an assisted-living facility. This means that the people who choose to live here are in need of minimal help with everyday living, but want to continue their independent lifestyles in a community setting.

The mission of the New England Friends' Home at Thayer House is to provide a homelike setting for elderly residents who will foster a congenial family atmosphere embodying the principles of simplicity, peace, community and equality. Services include medication supervision, housekeeping, personal laundry, both in-house and community-wide, and the attention of a 24-hour trained staff.

The Home Committee of the New England Yearly Meeting oversees the business and planning of the New England Friends' Home here in Hingham. Gretchen Condon is the home's director and a Hingham resident.

Everyone is welcome to celebrate the 100th Anniversary Celebration Reception on Sunday, June 8 from 1-4 p.m. The home, the landscaping, and the farm will be open for touring.

Three Generations of Rug Making
Since the early 1900's the Jafri family has been making and selling rugs around the world. Just outside of Lahore Pakistan is the original Dover workshop where many of our rugs are still made today, the same way they were made back then- by hand.

Rugs in School
A rug can teach you alot about art, history, culture, and tradition. We can learn about the tradition of rug making. Every year, school children visit our store and design their own rugs.

Dover Rug is proud to sponser The Second Annual June Conference on the Palestine-Israeli Conflict. June 17-19, Belmont Hill School.

he said. "They've distinguished themselves through scholarship, service, leadership, social awareness and athletics."

The Class of 2003 is the first class required to pass the MCAS exam to graduate, and the first group of seniors to move into the newly renovated wing of Cohasset Middle High School. It's a class that helped revive old traditions, like the school newspaper, and begin new ones, like the Mr. Skipper contest.

The 77 graduating seniors will be attending colleges across the country next year. Some will stay as close as Boston, others will spread out across New England, and a few will even be going as far away as Ohio, Virginia, Arizona and Oregon.

Jones said the Class of 2003 was a diverse group of students who made their presence felt in the classroom, in student government, in music, theater, and arts, and in athletics. "I think they set a good example for underclassmen, which is what we ask of seniors," Jones said.

Guidance Counselor Anne Porter said many of the students in the Class of 2003 had multiple interests and participated in various extracurricular activities, resulting in "a lot of personal standouts for different reasons." That dedication paid off when it came to applying to colleges. "The college admission process was a very successful one for this class because of their individual accomplishments," Porter said.

Senior Class President Curt Kahn recalled how his classmates took the lead in encouraging recycling at school and getting "The Spinnaker" newspaper back on the printing press. In athletics, Kahn noted, the seniors had success in hockey, soccer, tennis, and lacrosse, leading teams to tournament play in each of those sports.

Kahn said his classmates had bonded in the weeks leading up to graduation. "Our class has a lot of different personalities that have really come together over the past month," he said.

He said graduation would be an exciting event, but he would be sad to see his experience in Cohasset schools come to an end. "I've known every kid in the grade since elementary school, so it's going to be weird to see everyone go their separate ways," Kahn said.

Kahn will speak at graduation along with Jones, Superintendent Edward Malvey, valedictorian Elizabeth Reynolds and salutatorian Ross Lieb-Lappen.

Lieb-Lappen, who is also the student council president, said he appreciated the friendships that an education in small town like Cohasset produced. "What I like most is I feel like I can go up to anybody and have a normal conversation. We're really close because we've been together since kindergarten," he said.

"It's sad leaving. It really is," said Lieb-Lappen's partner on the student council, vice president Yasmine Afshar. "But the teachers prepare you well at Cohasset, and I think we're all ready to move on."

Seniors enjoyed their prom last Friday at The Venetian restaurant in Quincy. On Sunday night at Town Hall, seniors put on their Senior Show. On Wednesday night, after the Mariner went to press, many seniors were awarded local scholarships as part of Class Night at the high school.

Click It or Ticket nets 17 seatbelt violations

Thanks to help from a state grant, Cohasset police have been able to reinforce the message about the importance of wearing seatbelts this spring.

Over the past two weekends that included Memorial Day and the high school prom, Cohasset police served 37-1/2 hours on patrol and made 41 stops, resulting in 17 seatbelt violations, Police Chief Robert Jackson said.

In Massachusetts, not using a seatbelt is a secondary offense – meaning that you can only be cited for not wearing a seatbelt if stopped for speeding or other traffic violation. There is a $25 fine, but it is not a "surchargeable" offense and therefore, won't result in a hike in the motorist's automobile insurance, Jackson explained.

The stepped-up patrols were part of the "Click It or Ticket Campaign" and paid for in large part through a Governor's Highway Safety Bureau grant, Jackson said. During the campaign, police also issued 17 speeding citations and 17 written warnings for speeding, and made one arrest for operating under the influence. Three youths were also arrested for being minors in possession of alcohol and one citation was issued for an unregistered, uninsured vehicle.

"Hopefully this program will prevent a potential tragedy, by helping people realize the importance of buckling up," Jackson said.

He said more Click It or Ticket campaigns are planned for June 30-July 6and the Thanksgiving Day weekend.

Family friendly N.H. resort a vacation destination

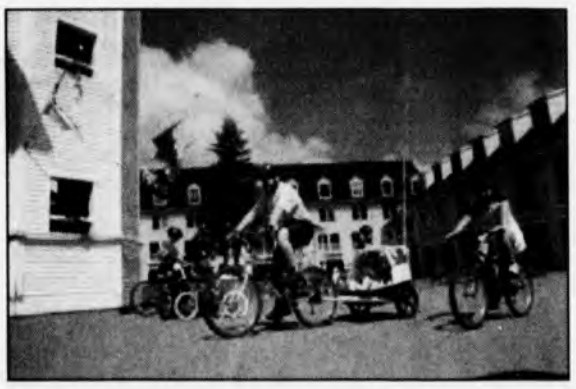
By Lisa M. Cataldo
CORRESPONDENT

Have you ever rented a cottage for the week planning to spend every minute at the beach, but it rained every day? Or how about getting that great deal on a motel room only to find you and your family too close for comfort, cramped up in a room on top of each other?

There's no doubt that parents have the very best of intentions when planning summer vacations, but it's the details that matter when it comes to making every member of the family satisfied. There are many factors that can either make or break a family vacation, but with careful planning, realistic expectations, and the right destination, families can enjoy a relaxing week away together forming memories that will last a lifetime.

Waterville Valley, New Hampshire is a ski resort area that has been attracting families during the summers for decades. Because of the abundance of activities offered to guests, many families have been known to park their cars and not look for their keys until the end of the week when it's time to go home.

Several inns and condominiums in Waterville Valley incorporate the Summer Unlimited pass into their daily rates which includes a two-hour daily mountain bike rental for each family member, a daily boat rental (kayak, paddle boat or canoe), unlimited court time on one of 18 outdoor clay tennis courts, 9 holes of midweek golf, one day of camp for children, and access to the White Mountain Athletic Club's indoor and outdoor pools, whirlpool, sauna and weight rooms. The local recreation department also offers an array of activities for families including children's golf lessons, archery, fishing trips, arts and crafts, and an open gym. The Summer Unlimited pass is also good on the day you check out. A shuttle is available to take families from one activity to the next.



Town Square, overlooking Corcoran's Pond in the Waterville Valley Village, is a picturesque scene with an exquisite mountain top backdrop. The square is home to a dozen shops, restaurants, general store, small beach area, and indoor skating rink, all within walking distance from the area's hotels, condominiums and inns. Because many of the lodging accommodations in the area are condominiums, families have more space and flexibility. Spending a week at a condominium often turns out to be a godsend for those on a budget, allowing families to cook their own meals. The extra space is also convenient at night when younger children turn in and older kids want to stay up to watch television or play a game.

"What families like best of all about Waterville Valley is that it's a self-contained resort, making it safe for families," said Janet Capaul, of the Waterville Valley Region Chamber of Commerce. "There's a wonderful kids program and so many different activities that kids and families can do together and separately. And it's a wonderful drive, within reach of a number of other attractions in the area."

The Waterville Valley Resort, just two hours north of Boston, was voted one of the top family resorts in the Northeast by FamilyFun Magazine in 2002. A day trip can be taken from the resort to a number of attractions popular with children such as Castle in the Clouds, Santa's Village, and Storyland.

"We're celebrating our 50th year this year at Storyland," remarked Jim Miller, marketing coordinator for the children's themepark in Glen, New Hampshire. "We're introducing two new attractions this year to celebrate – the Crazy Barn ride and the new miniature Tractor ride."

Storyland, located on 40 acres, is a well-manicured park

Fish in water story

Finding Nemo (A-)

Are there really 3.7 trillion fish in the sea, give or take? That's one of those factoids that probably has no chance of amounting to a kettle of fish, speaking of fish. But it's a place to start, since this Pixar comedy, mercifully lacking songs and a gloopy accompanying musical soundtrack, concentrates on the awesome task of finding one wee orange and white clown fish in the whole big sea, from the coral reef up to the bay of Sydney, Australia.

Nemo (voiced by Alexander Gould), with one deficient fin, is all that's left of the family of Marlin (Albert Brooks), who saw his wife and oodles of eggs about to hatch devoured in one swoop by a shark. Protective of his child to a fault, Marlin reluctantly takes the youngster to his first day of school. Kids being kids, Nemo disobeys dad's strict orders not to venture beyond the point where the reef drops off to unimaginable depths, and before you know it Nemo is scooped up in a net by a man in a boat and carried off to, as it turns out, a fish tank in a dentist's office.

So begins the adventure, excitingly told as a two-fold drama. Marlin, desperate to find directions to follow that boat, inquires of a lady fish, blue, and as it turns out, hopelessly muddled and with the memory of a fishy version of the poor fellow in "Memento." Dory (voice of Ellen DeGeneres), who can barely remember she's a fish, much less what she's doing, accompanies Marlin. She gets the best lines, delivered in DeGeneres' standard dead pan (suggesting that she needs another TV program, maybe as a tuna?). Three sharks trying to think of fish not as food but as friends are among the many creatures Marlin and Dory encounter.

The other strand is told in the dentist's office. In the fish tank where Nemo finds himself he also finds friends, notably Gill (Willem Dafoe), who dreams continually of escape and whom the other fish look to if not quite for guidance in his hair-brained (gill-brained?) schemes then at least for his valor and honor and kindness. Nemo is soon to become the pet of a nasty moppet, the dentist's niece, and we know she will mishandle her fish and an unhappy end awaits him.

"Finding Nemo" swims with these strands and alternates them, with a color

The mystery of sponge cake

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

For many bakers, sponge cake is no longer a simple workhorse recipe. The reason? Many cookbooks make a sponge cake using the French genoise method, which is finicky and prone to disaster.

My first step was to find a better, more foolproof recipe. My first thought was to use a more American approach, one used for chiffon cake. Some or all of the eggs are separated and then beaten independently. I knew that egg whites, especially when beaten with sugar, are relatively sturdy and less prone to deflating than whole egg foam. With that in mind, I began my search for a light cake, one with a springy but delicate texture, not dry or tough, one that would stand up nicely to rich custard filling. I began with a recipe that called for 3/4 cup cake flour, 3/4 cup sugar, and 5 eggs. I started by separating out all five of the whites and found that the cake was good but a bit too light with insufficient structure. When all-purpose flour was substituted for cake flour, the cake had more body and it was a bit tougher than the version with cake flour. I then tried different ratios of the two flours, finally settling with two-thirds cake flour to one third all-purpose. I also tested the proper ratio of eggs to flour and found that 5 eggs to 3/4 cup flour was best. Six eggs produced an "eggy" cake; four eggs resulted in a lower rise and a cake with a bit less flavor.

Two other ingredients added fat and flavor: four tablespoons of melted butter and two tablespoons of milk. Although I thought that the baking powder might be optional, it turned out to be essential to a properly risen cake since I was adding milk and butter. By adding cream of tartar to the egg whites during beating, the cake became tenderer, more evenly textured, and had more structure. This was because cream of tartar is an acid, which improves the performance of egg whites during whipping and baking.

Three baking temperatures were tested: 325, 350 and 375 degrees, and 350 degrees was the winner. I also discovered that this recipe can be made successfully in either two 8-inch or 9-inch pans, although making the entire recipe in one pan (one with high sides) is not recommended. The cake falls in the center. Determining when a sponge cake is properly cooked is a little more difficult than with a regular American layer cake. It should, however, provide some resistance and not feel as if one just touched the top of a soufflé. Another good test is color. The top of the cake should be a nice light brown, not a pale golden, nor should it be a dark, rich, brown.

You can fill these rounds with lemon filling or simply use any sort of jam and then sprinkle the top with powdered sugar (a fine sieve works well for this). By the way, jam-filled sponge cakes were very popular in the 19th century and were sometimes referred to as Martha Washington cakes.

FOOLPROOF SPONGE CAKE

The egg whites should be beaten to soft, glossy, billowy peaks. If beaten too stiff, they will be very difficult to fold in the whole-egg mixture.

1/2 cup cake flour
1/4 cup all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
1/4 teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons milk
4 tablespoons unsalted butter
1/2 teaspoon vanilla extract
5 eggs, room temperature
3/4 cup sugar
1/4 teaspoon cream of tartar

1. Adjust oven rack to lower middle position and heat oven to 350 degrees. Grease two 8- or 9-inch cake pans and cover pan bottom with a round of parchment paper. Whisk flours, baking powder, and salt in a medium bowl (or sift onto waxed paper). Heat milk and butter in a small saucepan over low heat until butter melts. Off heat, add vanilla; cover and keep warm.

2. Separate the eggs, placing whites in bowl of standing mixer fitted with the whisk attachment. Reserve the yolks in another mixing bowl. Beat the whites on high speed until whites are foamy. Gradually add 6 tablespoons of the sugar and the cream of tartar; continue to beat whites to soft, moist peaks. Transfer whites to a large bowl and add the yolks to the mixer bowl. (You do not need to wash the bowl.)

3. Beat the yolks with the remaining 6 tablespoons sugar on medium-high speed until eggs are very thick and a pale lemon color about 5 minutes. Return the beaten whites to the bowl and then sprinkle the flour mixture over beaten eggs. Mix on lowest speed for 10 seconds. Remove bowl from mixer, make a well on one side, and pour the melted butter mixture into the bowl. Fold very gently with a large rubber spatula until batter is evenly mixed, about 8 strokes.

5. Immediately pour batter into prepared baking pans; bake until cake tops are light brown and feel firm and spring back when touched, about 16 to 18 minutes for 9-inch cake pans and 20 to 22 minutes for 8-inch cake pans.

6. Cool completely on racks. Run a thin knife around the outside of the cake pans and then invert onto the racks (or onto cardboard rounds or tart pan bottoms) to release the cake from the pans. Remove parchment and fill and/or frost.

Makes two 8- or 9-inch rounds.

RICH LEMON FILLING

This is an excellent filling for sponge cake. It thickens easily and has plenty of lemon flavor.

1 cup sugar
1/4 cup cornstarch
1/8 teaspoon salt
1 3/8 cups cold water
4 large eggs
2 teaspoons zest from 1 lemon
1/2 cup lemon juice from 2 lemons
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
Confectioner's sugar for dusting

1. Bring sugar, cornstarch, salt, and water to simmer in a large nonreactive saucepan over medium heat, whisking occasionally at beginning of process and more frequently as mixture begins to thicken. When mixture starts to simmer and turn translucent, whisk in egg yolks, two at a time. Whisk in zest, then lemon juice, and finally butter. Bring mixture to a good simmer, whisking constantly. Remove from heat, and transfer to another container to cool to room temperature, placing a piece of plastic wrap directly on the surface of the filling to prevent a skin from forming. Let stand to a firm room temperature. (Can be refrigerated overnight.) To ensure that lemon filling does not thin out, do not whisk or vigorously stir it once it has set.

3. Carefully spoon filling over layer and spread evenly up to cake edge. Place the second layer on top making sure layers line up properly. Dust with confectioner's sugar and serve.

Fabulous foliages for the shady garden

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

The spirited melodies of tiny house wrens reverberate through the Scotch pine boughs above my garden as these petite birds energetically gather materials to build their nest. Each spring they return to raise their brood in the little birdhouse that dangles from a limb overlooking expansive clumps of frilly ferns, broad-leafed hostas and finely textured astilbes. Despite our dreary weather, they cheerfully collect twigs and stems that protrude through every opening in the nesting box. In the weeks to come, their efforts to nourish their hungry offspring will help to reduce the burgeoning insect population. I welcome their efforts, admire their work ethic, and consider their presence one of the most enjoyable rewards of my extensive plantings.

Momentarily mesmerized by their nearly continuous serenade, I paused to admire the lush, nearly tropical growth that has emerged from the damp earth beneath this small cluster of pine, birch, and cherry trees along my shady garden path. Dozens of hosta cultivars have never appeared more robust, their broad, succulent leaves creating majestic mounds of sensational proportions. From May to frost, these low-maintenance plants provide an elegant display of glorious foliage that cannot be surpassed for their diversity of leaf color and shape, plant habit, size and texture. Given these glowing attributes, it is not surprising that hostas currently rank as the most popular perennials in the country.

Hundreds of hosta cultivars have been introduced in recent years. Leaves vary in shape from round or heart-shaped to elongated or strap-like. Leaf size may be barely larger than a dime in the miniature cultivars, to nearly 24 inches across in some of the larger varieties. Miniature plants produce perfect, tiny mounds of foliage only four to six inches tall, ideal for the rock garden or the front of the border. Many of the giants resemble elephant ears with mature clumps reaching a dramatic stature of up to four feet tall which can serve as a focal point or backdrop for the rear of the border.

Hosta leaf color ranges from vibrant gold to deep, dark green, including shades of blue-green. Every conceivable combination of variegation is possible in white, cream or gold. These white or gold markings may be in the center of the leaf, around the outer margin, or splashed across the leaf. Tubular flowers may be white, lavender or purple and attract hummingbirds.

Hosta leaf color ranges from vibrant gold to deep, dark green, including shades of blue-green.

Variations in the textural quality of the hosta leaves further enhance the overall appearance of established clumps. Foliage may be glossy and smooth with a satin-like finish or cupped and puckered, creating a sear-sucker effect. While some varieties form perfectly symmetrical mounds of foliage, a few types are stoloniferous and spread quickly to form a dense ground cover. Perhaps my personal favorites are those that demonstrate an elegant, vase-shaped form, their leaves having particularly long, upright stems. Recent storms pummeled many of these stately cultivars including the magnificent Montana 'Aureomarginata', 'Regal Splendor', and 'Sagae', but hopefully these will quickly recover and resume their statuesque display.

Despite my love affair with the family of hostas, contrast in plant form, color and texture are primary design considerations in all my gardens, especially in the shady borders where foliage becomes the dominant player during the latter half of the growing season. Bleeding hearts (Dicentra spp.) are truly luxuriant this spring providing attractive, finely cut foliage that furnishes a pleasant contrast to the broad leaves of hostas in addition to their display of charming pink and white flowers. Tolerant of sun where soils are moisture-retentive, they thrive in dappled shade. The lovely, old-fashioned bleeding heart, D. spectabilis, with its perfectly formed rose-pink or white, heart-shaped flowers carried on arching, 3-foot fleshy stems, is truly a delight although the plant may turn yellow and enter dormancy in midsummer. The smaller fringed bleeding hearts, D. eximia, add marvelous textural variation to the shady garden and bloom intermittently throughout the summer. A recent introduction, D. 'King of Hearts', is particularly attractive demonstrating lacy blue-tinted foliage and deep rose-pink blossoms.

Interspersed among my growing collection of hosta cultivars are several clumps of feathery ferns. Clumps of Cinnamon fern (Osmunda cinnamomoea) and the evergreen Christmas fern (Polystichum acrostichoides) create an attractive foil for gold-tinted hostas while selected crested varieties of Lady Ferns (Athyrium Filix-femina) and Male Ferns (Dryopteris Filix-mas) provide a lacy contrast. Perhaps my two favorite ferns are the delicate Maidenhair Fern (Adiantum pedatum) and the Japanese Painted Fern (Athyrium nipponicum 'Pictum'). The wiry black stems of the Maidenhair fern grow to about a foot in height producing soft gray green foliage, which becomes light green with black midribs as the leaves mature. The Japanese Painted Fern furnishes colorful 18-inch fronds that are a unique, appealing blend of metallic silver, blue, green and burgundy. Truly a star in its own right, I adore it planted among blue hostas and the lovely bronze and purple-tinted leaves of the new strains of coral bells (Heuchera) including H. 'Plum Pudding', and H. 'Stormy Seas'.

Our local nurseries offer a diversity of shade-loving plants including many varieties of hosta. For a particularly large selection of hosta cultivars and unique shade plants, plan a visit to Cochato Nursery, 373 N. Franklin St. (Rt. 37) in Holbrook near the Braintree town line. The nursery and its lovely display gardens are open Thursday through Sunday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

palette heavy on the primaries for the Pixar approach's palpable feel of an imagined Disney ocean. The humans are less persuasively created, the dentist the main one, but the fish offer distinctive characterizations, with vocal work by Barry Humphries as a shark, Geoffrey Rush as a pelican, also Brad Garrett, Erik Per Sullivan, Allison Janney, Richard Kind and Austin Pendleton. The adventure itself satisfyingly concludes, unless you happen to believe that the appropriate place for a pretty fish is in a dentist's office fish tank. And as Crush, the ancient surfer-hip turtle would say, Dude, that's so un-way-cool, dude.

There is danger here and the loss, as so often in a Disney film, of loved ones. Children are increasingly accustomed to heavy stuff in movies designed for them but adults may shed a tear even if the children take it all in stride, or in fin, or, well, glub glub.

geared for children ages 2 through 12 based on classic children's stories and nursery rhymes such as Humpty Dumpty, The Old Woman in the Shoe, The Three Bears and Peter Rabbit. The park houses 20 themed rides, 4 live shows, a play area, and various attractions. Some have referred to the park as a "mini-Disney World."

"We do hear those comparisons," Miller said. "I think what keeps people coming back is a number of factors. First, we have stayed true to the original vision of the park and I think families appreciate that. And secondly, we keep the park clean and well maintained and our staff is friendly. Also, we have kept our pricing appropriate, so it's a good value for families."

According to Miller, Storyland has tens of thousands of visitors each year, primarily from the New England states and New York. The park is also adjacent to Heritage-NH, an interactive time travel adventure that celebrates the history of the early 1600s to present day. Heritage-NH has added a new attraction for 2003 – the Segway Human Transporter. The Segway, invented by New Hampshire native Dean Kamen, is a transportation device that will be available for visitors to try out for themselves.

Although Storyland is geared for children up to the age of 12, Miller said that older siblings really seem to enjoy the Bamboo Chutes, Dr. Geyser's Remarkable Raft Ride, the Turtle Twirl and the Polar Coaster. The park offers mother/baby feeding and changing rooms, complimentary strollers, and complimentary kennels on a first come, first served basis. Miller added that Heritage appeals to all ages.

"Waterville Valley offers different types of accommodations, everything from hotels and inns to 5 bedroom condos," said resort spokesman Stacy Lopes. "What attracts people is the fact that it's really affordable for families. It's located so that a day trip to the attractions is very accessible. Here at the resort everything is within walking distance and that's what makes it unique. It's a summer resort that lends itself to be family friendly."

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

HEARING TEST FOR INFANTS

Infants should receive a hearing test, either by recording electrical activity in the brain in response to a noise, or by listening for an inner-ear echo. The National Institute of Health recommends that an infant's hearing be tested before he or she leaves the hospital. Otherwise, hearing should at least be tested by age three months. Parents of newborns should be particularly conscientious about having their babies' hearing tested if they are born prematurely, their mothers contracted an infectious disease while pregnant, or there is a family history of childhood hearing loss. Babies in any of these categories have a greater risk for hearing loss and attendant delay of language development.

Communication is a vital part of our world today. Don't let a hearing impairment keep you or your child on the outside looking in. Help is available in many forms, and the first step is a consultation with a Board Certified Hearing Instrument Specialist. Here at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, we feature state-of-the-art testing equipment and hearing instruments designed to maximize each person's hearing potential. Call us at 781-337-1144 to set up an appointment for a comprehensive hearing test at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth.

P.S. Talking to your newborn and your baby's ability to hear your words are critical to the development of his or her language skills.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4

The moon enters Leo at 3:25 a.m., remaining there today and tomorrow. This is a time when creative and artistic projects will come together easily. Go with our imaginative side; be more easygoing, playful. The evening is prime for all social and romantic activities.

THURSDAY, JUNE 5

Yesterday's planetary influences are in effect today as well. A 90-degree alignment of Venus and Mars stimulates creativity and may spark romantic attractions. Keep it light; don't take anything too seriously. The Leo moon forms five major alignments to planets, setting a quick pace. Love is the name of the game this evening.

FRIDAY, JUNE 6

The planet Uranus takes the spotlight today and tomorrow. Its influence can go either way; it may bring exciting surprises or sudden reversals. Don't be rigid; relax and focus on the positives. The Leo moon becomes inactive at 2:18 a.m. until 10:51 a.m., when it enters Virgo. In addition, this moon opposes Uranus at 3:55 p.m. Spur of the moment ideas will be the most successful.

SATURDAY, JUNE 7

At 2:59 a.m. Uranus, standing at 3-degrees Pisces, begins retrograde travel. Read yesterday's advice. A Virgo moon makes for conflicting planetary energies today. The planet Uranus represents the urge for freedom, and the sign Virgo strives for perfection and order. The best way to work with today's energies is to lighten up and go with the flow. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 4:28 p.m. A full moon is building and will culminate next Saturday, June 14.

SUNDAY, JUNE 8

The Virgo moon aligns with Venus at 12:27 p.m. and becomes inactive. Handle duties and responsibilities, jobs you've been putting off. You can be most productive, if you focus on projects that require mental concentration and attention to detail. Influences are also prime for getting back on track with exercise and physical fitness routines. Get your life in order. The moon enters Libra at 3:30 p.m., and an alignment to Saturn at 4:32 p.m. continues to generate a serious mood.

MONDAY, JUNE 9

The combination of a Libra moon and sun-Pluto opposition makes this a day to think about change. What areas of your life are due for a major overhaul? Stop worrying about situations or personal habits you have control over, and do something about it. Now is the time to develop a game plan and initiate action toward your goal. Venus moves into Gemini at 11:32 p.m., remaining there until July 4. This period is prime for meeting people and establishing new alliances.

TUESDAY, JUNE 10

Take on a full work agenda today. You can make gains developing projects that require support or help from others this morning. Initiate new activities before 1:00 p.m., when the Libra moon aligns with Mars and becomes inactive. At 5:39 p.m. the moon enters secretive Scorpio, and influences turn around completely. A harmonious alignment to Saturn prompts you to keep your nose to the grindstone. It is okay to burn the midnight oil catching up on work or study projects. An applying alignment of Mercury and Mars warns against getting caught up in arguments or power struggles with others.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 11

Roll up your sleeves and stay busy with practical projects today. Finish old business rather than starting anything new. The Scorpio moon continues to generate a serious, quiet mood. Spend time alone. Purse activities that help you to relax and maintain perspective. Ninety-degree lunar alignments to Neptune and Jupiter in the afternoon and evening caution you to keep a cool head. Don't overdo, overreact or go to extremes. Others may be moody and difficult to please.

THURSDAY, JUNE 12

A 90-degree alignment of Venus and Uranus may tempt you to play hooky and do something different today. The Scorpio moon forms challenging contacts to Mars and Mercury until 5:51 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Keep it light and sidestep altercations with others. The windup to this month's full moon begins at 6:12 p.m., when the moon enters Sagittarius. Mercury moves into Gemini at 9:34 p.m., remaining there until June 29.

FRIDAY, JUNE 13

Gear up for a hectic day. Emotions and energy run high, as the full moon continues to build. You can get a lot accomplished, if you make up a list of things to do and stick to it. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action for a few days. Avoid acting on impulse or taking risks. It's often difficult to sleep on the eve of a full moon, so it's okay to work or party late into the night.

Baby boom

School numbers may jump if Avalon gets OK

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Although they don't have a crystal ball, members of the school department speculate the AvalonBay may attract more schoolchildren than developers estimate.

A recent report compiled by a subcommittee of the School Committee said the proposed 200-unit apartment complex off Rte. 3A may draw as many as 50 school-age children. The project could also have an indirect effect as "empty nesters" may look to the apartments as a way to downsize, leaving Cohasset single family homes open for occupancy by families with children.

The School Department is also armed with a report from Town Hall that estimates even more children could move into town if AvalonBay is built. An April 2003 financial analysis by Director of Finance Michael Buckley estimates with the cur-

Spirits were bright under the big tent of the South Shore Music Circus, in contrast with the overcast skies and dreary weather, as the Class of 2003 received their diplomas Saturday. Entering to the tune of Pomp and Circumstance, friends and family members rushed forward, cameras in hand, to capture the momentous occasion of graduates about to embark on the next chapter of their lives.

All in attendance remained on their feet as senior class chorus members sang a beautiful rendition of the Star Spangled Banner, which seems to touch the heartstrings even more in this uncertain time of war and violence.

Perhaps as a result of the world today, speeches were almost unanimous in speaking to the importance of community and family.

In a very personal and heartfelt speech, Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey told graduates to "Stay in contact with your family. There is nothing more important to a parent than to hear

Train gates may open door to dispute

Letter sent to Sec. Grabauskas

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

"The board would request the MBTA and its contractor refrain from submitting design packages on grade crossings until such time as this issue is resolved."
— Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris

It might save the MBTA a few headaches if it would agree to use quadrant gates along the Greenbush corridor.

Cohasset selectmen have asked the MBTA and its contractor, Cashman-Balfour Beatty, to stop submitting design documents showing standard grade crossing treatment with median barriers and not quadrant gates.

According to Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris, the gates' issue is before the Army Corps of Engineers which has yet to render its decision.

Median barriers would be required for safety reasons if standard gates are used because Greenbush is a whistle-free corridor and the medians would prevent impatient motorists from skirting around a closed gate to beat the train. Selectmen in Cohasset, Hingham, and Scituate want quadrant gates used for both safety and aesthetic reasons. Median barriers aren't needed for quadrant gates, which have four arms (as opposed to two with standard gates), because they block both sides of the road going in each direction.

McMorris said the issue potentially puts the MBTA in violation of its mitigation agreement with the town because the type of gate has not been fully determined.

"The board would request the MBTA and its contractor refrain from submitting design packages on grade crossings until such time as this issue is resolved," she stated in a June 5 letter to state Transportation Secretary Daniel A. Grabauskas.

McMorris also asked Grabauskas to clarify the Romney administration's intentions, as reported by the Boston Globe, to seek ways to reduce the cost of Greenbush by scaling back on mitigation agreements.

"While the MBTA has honored its agreement with the Town of Cohasset to this point, these published reports cause the Board of Selectmen to take notice and seek clarification from the administration," she said.

Construction on the 17.7-mile Greenbush line is currently on hold pending resolution of outstanding permitting and right-of-way issues. Romney has said he would also use this time to review the cost of the estimated $464 million project.'

Volunteers are the heart of arts festival

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"We couldn't put it on without the volunteers."
— Sarah Hannan, art center

The South Shore Art Center Festival on the Common continues to be a success year after year. Now in it's 48th season, the festival has been drawing crowds to Cohasset common for almost half a century. But for all the attention it receives, the people who make it all possible, the volunteers, often go unnoticed.

"We couldn't put it on without the volunteers," said Executive Director Sarah Hannan. With so many tasks to be completed before the big day, the 100 plus volunteers help keep things running smoothly.

With all the help they receive, volunteers can perform specific jobs, such as transporting artwork or performing demonstrations, which disperses the responsibility. With such an effective group effort, "No one is really overtaxed," said Hannan. "As long as we keep track of who's doing what, we're OK."

This year's festival will run Friday, June 13 from 2-7 p.m., Saturday, June 14 from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. and Sunday, June 15 from 12-6 p.m.

Each year, new volunteers become involved, but there are some who have made this an annual activity. Julie Guild has been a volunteer with the Arts Center for more than 20 years. Originally, she participated as a board member, with the festival serving as a fundraiser to help sponsor a remodeling project for the old building. She remembers the old facilities well, and recalls how inadequate a space it was to work in. "It was like painting in a barn," she said.

Now serving as a member on the Board of Advisors, Guild is still volunteering and enjoying the displays year after year. Her favorite part of the festival is "looking at the art and seeing the

All-facilities sticker price correction

The all-facilities sticker, which is now on sale, is $30 per vehicle; and $15 per vehicle for those age 60 and over. The Mariner incorrectly reported the price of the sticker for second and subsequent vehicles last week.

Last year's RTF stickers were $35; and beach stickers were $7 per vehicle, or $3 per vehicle for senior citizens.

The Mariner regrets the error and any confusion it may have caused.

Wadsworth steps down from board

The Cohasset Historical Commission is looking for a new member, but is careful not to say that person would replace local historian David Wadsworth.

Wadsworth has stepped down from the commission after some 24 years.

"He'll be missed," said chairman Noel Ripley, adding that Wadsworth's research was always "impeccable."

Over the years, Wadsworth has inventoried upwards of 1,500 historic homes in town and did the legwork for establishing the town's National Register Historic Districts at the common and Government Island, and getting the Gropius house and the two Cohasset Historical Society museums listed on the National Register, among other efforts.

"I'll still be around," Wadsworth said this week. "But 24 years is a long time."

Wadsworth is currently working with the historical society to get its new headquarters, the Pratt building, listed on the National Register.

Anyone interested in serving on the Historical Commission should contact the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105 or stop by Town Hall.

Shipsky resigns from two boards

Architect Jim Shipsky has notified selectmen he is resigning from both the Open Space Committee and the Tri-Town Weir River Estuary Park Committee. Shipsky said he plans to devote time instead to working with the Cohasset Environmental Support Group that recently worked with one of Jack Buckley's classes to clean up trash along Atlantic Avenue at Treat's Pond. The group also plans to tackle a dunes' restoration project opposite Sandy Beach.

Citizens interested in serving on the Open Space or Weir River committees, should contact the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105 or stop by Town Hall.

Snow removal money

The town has received some good financial news. Snow removal reimbursement in the amount of $34,972.39 has been deposited in the town's bank account. The money covers police and fire overtime and snow removal costs for the Presidents' Day blizzard. The federal government honored Gov. Mitt Romey's request to declare the state as a disaster area, opening the door for federal funds.

"We're very excited – this will reduce our snow removal deficit," Town Manager Mark Haddad said. The town budgeted about $60,000 for fiscal year 2003, which ends June 30, and spent about $120,000, he said. The state allows municipalities to deficit spend their snow removal accounts, but the deficit has to be recouped the following year. Haddad said money to cover the balance of the deficit will have to come from free cash or the town's stabilization fund.

CPC funding recommendations

Anyone wishing to petition the Cohasset Community Preservation Committee ("CPC) for a funding recommendation at the November 2003 Special Town Meeting must submit an initial application to the committee no later than July 1, 2003. Please note that the CPC may only recommend to Town Meeting those projects involving the acquisition and preservation of open space, historical preservation and/or promotion of low to moderate income housing.

Qualifying applicants will be asked to make formal presentations to the CPC.

Copies of the application may be obtained at the Town Hall or by calling the committee Chairman, Stuart Ivimey at 383-2604.

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall as of Tuesday, May 27:

Conservation Commission, June 12 at 7:30 p.m., June 26 at 7:30 p.m.

Deer Hill School Council, June 4 at 3:30 p.m. at Deer Hill School

Planning Board, June 25 at 7:30 p.m.

Zoning Board of Appeals, June 16 at 7 p.m. (40A), June 19 at 7 p.m. (3 Jerusalem Lane), June 30 at 7 p.m. (Avalon)

All meetings are at Town Hall unless posted otherwise.

Fire Dept. signs on 3A requested

Town Manager Mark Haddad has asked MassHighway to install two "Fire Engine Entering" signs on Route 3A in both directions at the former Graham Waste Building at 110 Chief Justice Cushing Highway. The town is renovating the police-fire headquarters on Elm Street and the fire department has temporarily relocated to the 3A site. Haddad expects the fire department to remain at its temporary location until July 31.

The temporary signs would help protect the fire department and the motoring public, said Haddad, who had not heard from MassHighway by press time.

Street sign sought

Annellen Walsh, 130 Nichols Road, has written to selectmen asking for a street sign on Nichols Road alerting motorists to her dangerous driveway.

"We have missed many very dangerous accidents," she wrote in her May 27 letter. "It is completely blind to drivers coming up from Nichols Road from Atlantic Avenue. I only hope someone doesn't get killed there."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he forwarded the request on to the Department of Public Works, which will install the sign.

Recycling earns $4K state grant

The Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) has awarded the Town of Cohasset $4,228 for recycling 597 tons of trash over a six-month period through its Municipal Recycling Incentive Program (MRIP).

The MRIP program rewards cities and towns that take steps to improve their recycling programs by paying them twice a year for each ton of material that is recycled by their residents. These payments are then invested back into community programs to make further program improvements. Over the past 5-1/2 years, nearly $13 million have been paid to Massachusetts cities and towns through the MRIP program. MRIP is funded by the state's Clean Environment Fund, which is comprised of unclaimed beverage container deposits.

Cohasset receives a payment of $4 per ton for each ton of glass, paper, cans, and plastic that residents recycled. But, for every additional ton that was recycled compared with last year, Cohasset was paid at a bonus rate of $20 per ton.

Each year, recycling in Massachusetts reduces greenhouse gas emissions by nearly 1 million tons of carbon equivalent, saves enough energy to power 140,000 homes, and supports 12,000 jobs and $600 million of economic development.

The Department of Environmental Protection is responsible for ensuring clean air and water, safe management of solid and hazardous waste, timely cleanup of hazardous waste sites and spills, and the preservation of wetlands and coastal resources.

State cuts to curb senior transport service to Boston

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

As of June 30, seniors will be losing one of their most valuable transportation assets. The Medical Transport to Boston, or MTB-5 program will be cut due to a lack of funding by the state.

The program, which provides transportation with handicapped accessibility for all Cohasset seniors 60 years and older, to appointments at hospitals, clinics, and doctors' offices in the Boston area, has been available to residents since 1999, and could possibly leave seniors without a way to get into the city. Come September, the Medical Assistance Program, which brings Cohasset seniors to out-of-town appointments, and also provides handicapped accessibility, will suffer the same fate.

"I think they're cutting the wrong things," said Synn McGlynn who frequently uses the local transport offered by the CEA and is planning on writing to legislators on the program's behalf. While she will not be directly affected by the end of the service, she has great empathy for those who will. "What's going to happen to those people?"

Transportation Coordinator for the Council on Elder Affairs, Dee Dee Jakaus, knows first hand how the end of the MTB-5 and MAP programs will impact many individuals. As an added result of the lack of funding, her position at the CEA will be cut as well. "This program goes, I go," she said.

McGlynn, who has relied on Jakaus many times to help coordinate various trips, wonders what she will do without her. "We're going to miss her. It's a crime that she's leaving. She's been a Godsend," she said.

Although the end of the program will be a great loss to the community, Jakaus is quick to recognize the importance of the services the CEA Medical Van will still be able to provide. "We do a lot more local than we do in Boston," she said. "We will always have a driver to take them within a 15-mile radius," and with a radius of that size, trips to medical facilities in Weymouth, Quincy, and the surrounding areas will still remain possible.

McGlynn has had wonderful experiences with the local transportation and speaks very highly of the program. "I can't say enough about the drivers," she said. She is always impressed with how courteous and punctual they are. She is also grateful for the amount of freedom they provide to many seniors who "want to be independent." "When they can get a ride, it's a wonderful service."

Jakaus speculates that with programs such as this being forced to end around the state, doctors might be more willing to take the time to travel to offices south of the city. With some already designating one day a week for special visits, she hopes more will follow suit, enabling patients the opportunity to schedule appointments they will be able to keep. But for McGlynn, who has a dentist in Boston, she wonders whether it might be easier to find a new office closer to home.

For out-of-town appointments that do not require handicapped accessibility, the FISH program, which is run with volunteer drivers, will still be available Monday through Friday. For more information on any transportation programs, including special lunch programs, Sunday church services, trips around town and to shopping malls, please contact the transportation dispatcher at 781-383-0220.

Community service in lieu of suspension?

New program is on the table

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Middle High School is looking into a program which would involve students in community service projects as an alternative to being suspended from school. The program, which would help students learn the valuable lesson of what it means to get involved in the community, would take place during after-school hours, allowing students to remain in class, school officials said.

The project, funded by a federal grant, would be available to all schools within the Lighthouse District, which includes Cohasset, Duxbury, Hanover, Marshfield, Milton, Norwell, Scituate and Weymouth.

Funding would be used to compensate mentors for the program, potentially teachers, who would supervise various community related acts of service as well as provide support and encouragement for participants. The students could provide help for myriad projects involving local schools, nursing homes, after-school programs, the council on aging, parks or recreation programs, food pantries, town services, or churches.

Health Education Coordinator, Mike Gill, who would serve as the program's District Liaison, presented the information to the School Committee last week. He believes it would be a great way to help students get "reconnected with the schools."

"It does sound like a promising alternative," said CHS principal Mike Jones. While the schools would be able to use the program at their own discretion, taking each separate case into consideration, Jones thinks this program could work well for younger students, or students with a less serious offense, such as excessive tardiness. Chairman of the School Committee Rick Flynn also believes this program has potential value in the disciplinary process at the schools, "It would clearly depend on the severity [of the act], but it gives you another option to use."

Other program components include a social learning software program called Ripple Effects, used to help students reduce aggressive behavior and improve academic performance, as well as team building events or field trips, available for participants in the eight towns. District Liaisons will also coordinate activities, training and events for mentors, students and parents.

The school department plans to reach a decision on whether to incorporate the program by the fall.

Avalon could attract kids

rent proposal of 58 one-bedroom units, 120 two-bedroom units and 22 three-bedroom units, there could potentially be as many as 105 new students added to the current enrollment of 1,392 from the complex alone.

Both estimates are considerably higher than AvalonBay's calculation, that the units would attract only about 30 school-age children. At press time, AvalonBay was unavailable for comment.

School Committee members worry the movement of empty nesters as well as seniors to the proposed housing project could lead to a "double whammy" effect on the schools, for which they might not have the flexibility to accommodate.

"I, as a member of the School Department, think it's a good possibility," said Supt. Edward Malvey, noting the numbers are speculation at this point. "There's no way to look into a crystal ball."

The report to the School Committee, written by Chartis Tebbetts, is a rough copy of what will be presented to the Zoning Board of Appeals, from which Avalon is seeking a comprehensive permit to build the project. It suggests some ways tAvalonBay might be asked to mitigate its effects, should the development move forward. A road and walkway will need to be designed on the Avalon property to ensure the safe drop-off and pick-up of students using buses to get to school. There also needs to be safe access for students who walk or bike to school, both in the development area and along Rte. 3A, Sohier Street and Pond Street as well as safe play areas for children living on the property.

Since there are limited recreational facilities in town, the addition of students would require more facilities for sports, such as a year-round swimming/diving pool, the arts and playgrounds.

With more students comes a need for more teachers, and not only classroom teachers, but specialists, such as physical education, music and art as well as special needs. There are limited nursery schools in the area and the schools are at their limit of busing capacity, which will need to be dealt with as well.

The report also points out the positives that AvalonBay could bring to the town, such as quality rental housing, quality smaller housing and "affordable" housing, providing more income and age diversity.

Buckley's report figured the town's average cost per pupil at roughly $10,638, multiplied by the additional 105 estimated children, showing the influx of students could add a burden of roughly $1,116,974 to the town's budget. Through a quick analysis of the proposed rents, Buckley estimated a tax revenue of roughly $400,000, not nearly enough to cover the expense of the students.

ZBA Chairman Woody Chittick said there is no way of knowing if the School Committee concerns are warranted, since predictions cannot be made regarding who might move into the development. Empty nesters from any community on the South Shore could potentially want to move out of their homes to downsize. "I don't think Avalon will affect that migration," he said.

Chittick said it is a "Catch-22" situation. It's possible Avalon could be asked to reduce the number of three-bedroom units, which might deter families from moving in, but a higher number of smaller units might attract more empty nesters, freeing up their homes for families with children.

AvalonBay is seeking a comprehensive permit under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law, to build the complex. Towns, like Cohasset, with little housing that meets state affordability standards are vulnerable to comprehensive permits which allow developers to skirt local zoning regulations in exchange for providing some affordable housing. The Avalon project is proposed on the 62-acre former Webb Norfolk Conveyor site, which is commercially zoned.

A final draft of the School Committee report may be presented for approval at the June 19 meeting. From there, the report is expected to make its way to the ZBA sometime in July.

Woodside Cemetery Flag Day ceremonies

In the summer of 2002 automobile dealer, Herb Chambers, donated a flag depository to the George H. Mealy Post of the American Legion in Cohasset. The purpose of the depository was to accept tattered and torn American flags for proper disposal. The depository, which is installed in front of the American Legion hall on Summer Street in Cohasset has to date, collected well in access of 100 flags. On Flag Day, Saturday, June 14 at 6 p.m. the Sons of the American Legion, Squadron 118 of Cohasset will conduct a flag burning ceremony of these flags at Woodside Cemetery in Cohasset. Additionally, the Sons will dedicate a new flagpole at the cemetery donated by the Sons. All are invited to attend for what promises to be a very patriotic and important event for the town. Veterans are encouraged to attend; there will a reception afterwards at the Legion hall. Anyone with an old flag may also bring it to the ceremony. Old flags will also continue to be accepted at the depository.

Trial is postponed again

The trial of school business manager Ivan Klimko was postponed again Thursday at Hingham District Court because of a lack of available judges. A spokesman for the Plymouth County District Attorney's office said several jury cases were continued because there was only one judge in the building that day. Klimko's trial has been rescheduled for Aug. 5.

In April, Klimko's trial was continued to June 5 after a Cohasset judge recused himself from the case.

Klimko is charged with assault and battery with a deadly weapon stemming from an alleged dispute with his wife at their Hull home on Dec. 3.

Astronaut tells Deer Hill students to aim for the stars

Hometown boy is now at NASA

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

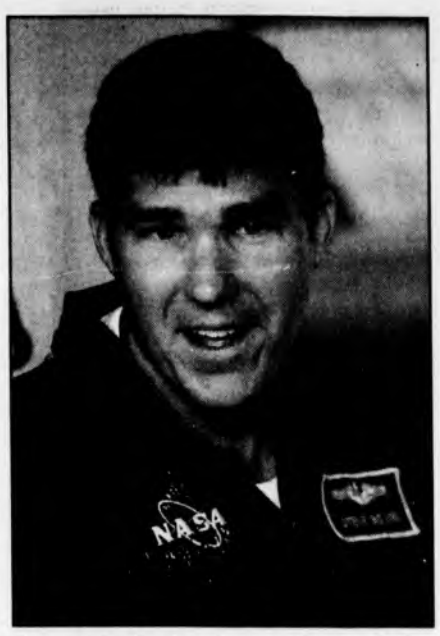
Students at the Deer Hill School were given a rare glimpse into outer space Friday, when Commander Stephen Bowen paid a visit to speak about astronaut training, space shuttle missions, the International Space Station, and what it is like to live the life of an astronaut.

Bowen, who attended Deer Hill more than 30 years ago, returned to the school to stress the importance of getting a good education and of studying hard, to gain the ability to follow your dreams and take every opportunity that presents itself.

The multimedia presentation began with Bowen's showing a picture of his former fourth-grade class, projected on a large screen. Many students recognized the teacher from the photo and exclamations could be heard as students filed in, "Look at Mr. Levine!"

Bowen shared amazing video clips of space shuttle launchings, telling the students, "Unlike most things you see on TV, this is real." He also presented slides of actual photographs taken in space, which included stars colliding, stars being born, a nebula, and clear shots of Saturn's rings.

Students from grades 4-6 met with Bowen in groups to watch the presentation, and were given the opportunity to ask questions about astronaut life. Areas of great interest included the food astronauts eat, how astronauts sleep without the gravity to hold them down, and what would happen if a cup of water spills. Students were especially amused to hear astronauts may sometimes find themselves suspended in the middle of the room if they float too far away to be able to push off from something.



Commander Stephen Bowen, who attended Deer Hill School in the mid-1970s, shares what it's like to be an astronaut with students.

Tara Goodwin holds a model of the moon to measure its relative distance from the earth.

Areas of great interest included the food astronauts eat, how astronauts sleep without the gravity to hold them down, and what would happen if a cup of water spills.

Bowen also talked about the importance to exercise while in space. Without the constant weight of gravity working your muscles, many astronauts, although required to work out for two hours daily while in space, come back to earth and aren't as strong as they were when they left. Studies have been done in space to help understand the way osteoporosis affects people on Earth.

Most importantly, Bowen shared some of his experiences from his childhood, telling the students that he used to be in the lowest reading group in his early elementary years. "I didn't just say it was too hard," he said, and went on to explain that he wouldn't give up, studied hard and joined the highest reading group just one year later. When faced with a challenge, and when things seem too difficult to finish, "those are the things you should really try to do," he said.

Bowen told the students it is important to go in the direction of their dreams, leaving room for the opportunities they never would have expected that could come their way. In broadening their outlook, they can achieve more than they would have imagined. "I really feel like I never closed any doors," he said.

Bowen is the first submarine officer to be selected by NASA for astronaut training. He feels very fortunate to have become one of only 17 astronauts accepted from several thousand applicants for the class of 2000, and credits not only himself, but the number of great teachers he had along the way. For the students of the future, Bowen advises, "If you continue to work toward your dreams, there's no telling what you might do."

Village plans could be finalized Tuesday

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Village revitalization is going to take center stage at the selectmen's meeting at 8:15 p.m. Tuesday.

Selectmen are expected to sign off on the final plans drafted by the Waterfield Design Group, which was hired by the to design village improvements, and will determine if it's feasible to bury utility wires.

"Hopefully we'll finalize everything."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

"Hopefully we'll finalize everything," Town Manager Mark Haddad said. The town is also seeking a one-year extension on the $1.5 million state Public Works Economic Development grant (PWED) to June 2005, which will pay for much the village revitalization project. The extension would allow more time to complete construction which is expected to take as long as nine months. The project would also have to be put out to bid.

At a recent meeting after considerable discussion, selectmen voted to spend $12,800 for Waterfield to design a village with underground wires, a project that could cost $800,000. The money was also to be used to explore feeding the wires behind homes and businesses on Elm Street below St. Stephen's and from behind South Main Street shops via the town parking lot – a plan that selectmen hope would be less expensive than putting the wires underground.

Village businesses and merchants have said they raised $200,000 to contribute to the downtown project if removing utility wires were incorporated into the plans. On Tuesday selectmen will find out if the merchants were able to raise another $100,00-$200,000, as hoped. Waterfield estimates the downtown revitalization to cost about $1.1 million — not including the cost of burying the wires.

Residents have already had two chances to pay for burying the wires, once a few years ago by way of a hike in their utilities bill, and once earlier this year by way of an override, both of which were turned down. However, some selectmen feel residents would probably want the wires removed if they did not have to pay for the project.

Shortcake sweetens up Strawberry Fest

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Got a sweet tooth? Stop by the Second Congregational Church's annual Strawberry Festival, to be held alongside the Festival on the Common, Friday June 13 to Sunday June 15.

For the past 15 years, church members have been serving up delicious strawberry shortcake, marking the unofficial start of summer for many who attend. The dessert has become so popular over the years that the church estimates total weekend sales of roughly 2,500 shortcakes, requiring 525 quarts of berries.

"We have people who come all three days. It's been a great fundraiser for us," said co-chair Annette Sawchuk. In fact, in the 15 years since the event began, more than $100,000 has been raised, with proceeds supporting local charities including Father Bill's Place, the Social Service League of Cohasset, the Mary Martha Learning Center in Hingham and Wellspring in Hull..

Local growers in Rhode Island supply the berries, which are picked early Thursday morning, then shipped off to be received by church members around 5 p.m. Berries are prepared and sugared that night, ready to meet their destiny atop buttermilk biscuits as strawberry shortcake Friday morning.

The church's brick courtyard, adjacent to Cohasset Town Hall, will serve as an outdoor café, where Festival visitors can sit and enjoy a snack, lunch or dinner, brought to their table by friendly wait staff. Indoor tables will also be available. Shortcakes and other fresh baked goods, fruit cups and cold drinks will also be available "to go" for those who wish to enjoy their treats as they explore the more than 80 art exhibits and attractions of the Festival on the Common.

Shortcakes are $4 each and will be sold during Festival hours. Second Congregational will also serve caesar salads, with or without grilled chicken, hamburgers and hotdogs, as well as fresh pastries and cold drinks.

Lobster rolls to be offered at Festival

Seafood lovers will surely be in for a treat as the First Parish Church will be holding its first lobster roll sale Friday, June 13 through Sunday, June 15 in conjunction with the Festival on the Common. All lobster rolls will be made fresh by the Parish House and sold all day long during the festivities.

"It's the perfect June meal," said Lucia Woods of the First Parish Church. "Have a lobster roll with us, then go across the common for some strawberry shortcake." She sees the sale as the perfect opportunity to raise money while providing a delicious summer meal for the community to enjoy. "It's just too good to be true," she said.

Each meal costs $9 and includes an all-meat lobster salad roll with a bag of potato chips. Proceeds will benefit the First Parish Church and various church interests.

Volunteers are the heart of festival varied talent and wide range of subject matter." "It's really fun."

She has watched the Center grow over the years and feels it is a great asset to the community. "The Festival is the peak season for the Art Center," she said, and by volunteering her time, she can help make this very important Cohasset tradition happen.

Pat McCarthy has also been volunteering on and off for roughly the past 15 years. After attending art school, she occasionally took classes at the Art Center, and eventually accepted a teaching position with a local school. After a few years, the Art Center asked her to teach, and she has been ever since.

During the festival, she acts as a demonstrator, painting watercolors on the common for passers by to enjoy. "I love the excitement of the whole thing," said McCarthy. "It's a very festive time."

Last year, McCarthy's painting was featured on T-shirts and other Festival memorabilia. "That was kind of exciting for me," she said.

McCarthy's work will receive an award this Friday as she will become the recipient of the sunrise prize for her painting Le Angles. McCarthy spends the winters in Naples, Florida and painted the picture of a local store there.

Not only does McCarthy enjoy showing her craft to others at the Festival, she also enjoys her surroundings as she paints. "It really is a lovely setting," she said.

Rain or shine, this annual tradition is sure to have the continued success that keeps its volunteers coming back.

Archeologists look for buried artifacts in Hingham Square

Dig is mandated by train project

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A team of archeologists from UMass are compiling a report which will determine if more digging is needed.

Workers with hardhats and backhoes were back along the railroad bed in Hingham Square last week. But they weren't there to resume work on the controversial Greenbush line, whose construction was suspended in February pending resolution of outstanding permitting and right-of-way issues.

Rather a group from the University of Massachusetts was on hand, with the support of Cashman Balfour Beatty (CBB) and the MBTA, sifting through the dirt in a series of trenches to see if any archeological artifacts might be unearthed. CBB, a joint venture, has the contract to construct the train.

Hingham's "Little Dig" last week may be a precursor to its own "Big Dig" if Gov. Mitt Romney — who during the construction hiatus is reviewing the financial aspects of Greenbush — gives the railroad restoration project the green light. An 800-foot, $40 million tunnel is planned under Hingham Square that would also include two boat sections or approaches totaling 2,100 feet, which gradually descend into the tunnel. At its deepest point, the tunnel would be 26 feet.

The MBTA is bound by an agreement reached with the Army Corps of Engineers, Massachusetts Historical Commission, and the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation in Washington and the five Greenbush towns to ensure historic resources are protected in what is called a "Section 106" agreement.

The agreement includes archeological surveys when needed, according to Maureen Cavanaugh of Epsilon Associates of Maynard. Epsilon is project conservator on Greenbush.

Hingham, which was settled in 1633, is one of the oldest towns in Massachusetts. The village was developed overlooking Town Brook that terminated at Hingham Harbor, expanding residential and commercial activity over 300 years necessitated the vast filling of wetlands. The filling was accomplished by oxcart and wheelbarrow, so there are many strata that could contain artifacts.

In preparation for this month's archeological dig, test pits were dug along the rail bed in the Square. Trenches were then dug in the areas that were determined by the test pits or historical records as having the potential to yield some significant artifacts, said Jim Eng, who is the MBTA director of construction for Greenbush.

Eng said the team of archeologists from UMass are compiling a report which will determine if more digging is needed. Until the report is released later this week or next week, it won't be known if any historical artifacts of significance have been found, he explained.

Cavanaugh, the project conservator, explained unearthing artifacts determined to be significant would not stop the project unless human remains were found.

Archeological artifacts are excavated and studied. To be of significance, they must meet National Register criteria of eligibility, she said. The old Cohasset Roundhouse, which is beneath the town parking lot along the right of way, meets that criteria, for example.

Hingham Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan said any artifacts that are uncovered should eventually make their way back to Hingham where they could be preserved and displayed. He also explained colonial settlers along Town Brook used their backyards as "dumps" so many interesting items may turn up. He noted much can be learned about everyday life by what people have thrown away.

"It's entirely possible that they may find something really interesting," Macmillan said.

Student coastal center at Mariners Park to open Friday, June 20

Roy Herzfelder is guest speaker

The Center for Student Coastal Research announces Ellen Roy Herzfelder, the state Secretary for the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, will provide the keynote address at ceremonies marking the Center's official opening from 5-7 p.m., Friday, June 20. The Center for Student Coastal Research (CSCR) will celebrate the establishment of a harborfront laboratory and classroom facility dedicated to supporting coastal research projects of importance to Cohasset and surrounding communities in the South Coastal Watershed.

CSCR's core educational mission is to provide opportunities for high school students to study local watershed issues. CSCR is dedicated to assisting students to complete research projects that meet the rigors of professional scientific review; CSCR students, therefore, serve community interests and needs. CSCR is equally dedicated to providing younger students with programs designed to engage them in the exploration of the coastal environment and to assist them in developing their skills as young scientists.

The opening of CSCR's doors will mark the successful work of numerous volunteers who labored to rehabilitate a long abandoned, but historic town landmark, the Captain Aubrey Crocker home, better known locally as the Hagerty building. Though still a work in progress, the Center will open its doors this summer to dozens of young scientists enrolled in its Seaside Adventures program and a select group of high school students focused on research projects in Cohasset Harbor, Little Harbor, Bassings Beach, and the Gulf River.

CSCR will also be celebrating area artists who have leased studios in the building as part of a collaborative agreement between the Center and the South Shore Art Center.

Class of 2003, you're free, but there are strings attached

Class of 2003, it's your turn to fly out of the comfortable nest of high school and take your place in the world that needs you so badly.

We adults aren't doing such a terrific job.

We're handing you a world with turmoil and terrorism.

We're handing you a world with racism, recession, and an occasional riot.

EDITORIAL

We're handing you a world with homelessness, AIDS, and billion dollar banking scandals.

We're handing you a world with a hole in the ozone layer, defoliation of the rain forest, and slicks on our ocean.

Class of 2003, you don't remember this, but the year of your birth, 1985, while you were snuggled in your warm receiving blanket, after years of a cold war that froze the world in fear that a superpower would launch a nuclear holocaust, the United States and the Soviet Union resumed arms negotiations.

Ronald Reagan, 73, took the oath of office for a second term. IRA terrorists killed nine officers and civilians at an Ulster police base. Tens of thousands marked the 40th anniversary of the liberation of the Buchenwald death camp. The PLO captured a cruise ship called the Achille Lauro and killed an American, Leon Klinghoffer.

Dwight Gooden won the National League Cy Young Award, and boxer Michael Spinks earned the heavyweight crown by beating Larry Holmes.

25,000 were killed as a volcano in Columbia spewed forth its deadly lava.

Moviegoers were taking an armchair trip "Out of Africa," "The Color Purple" dominated the cinema rainbow, and we were "Witnesses" to the simplicity of Amish life.

TV clickers were going wild among "The Cosby Show," "Benson," "Kate and Allie," and "St. Elsewhere."

Rap music had begun to ripple through junior highs.

Fleet-footed Joan Benoit found no heartache on Heartbreak Hill as she won the Boston Marathon.

A man named Wade of our beloved, eternally snakebitten Red Sox Boggled American League pitchers in his quest for the batting crown.

Our own Celtics rocketed past Houston to become champions of the parquet floor.

The year you let go of your mother's hand, packed Twinkies into your lunchbox for the first time, and entered kindergarten, 1990, glasnost was the buzz word, meaning peace between the two major powers.

But peace did not last long.

Up until 1990, a Patriot missile was a pass by a football team that had not yet won a Super Bowl. Scuds were small windstorms. Bagdad was a mysterious city with casabas and belly dancers. Kuwait was a tiny, very rich little country far away.

All that changed on January 15, 1991 when President George Bush (Senior)'s thousand points of light turned into 1,000 bombs over Bagdad. The country was in a Desert Storm. This storm was quickly over and had passed into history by the time you tipped your tiny mortarboard and went on to first grade.

While you were in grammar school, the world was a busy place. Your parents watched the Berlin wall fall, the Anita-Hill-Clarence Thomas debacle, and a boxing champion named Mike Tyson jailed for rape.

They watched the Soviet Union disintegrate and Chinese students massacred in Bejing.

They watched apartheid crumble and the first free elections in South Africa.

They saw a young man from Hope, Arkansas become the first Democrat in the White House in 13 years.

They watched a video of five cops beating a black man named Rodney King and a subsequent not guilty verdict inflame the worst riots in the history of the country.

They watched 90 members of a religious cult burn to death in Waco, Texas.

They saw floods in the Midwest and lived through Robert Parish-high snow in the Northeast.

They saw Celtic captain Reggie Lewis's fatal heart attack tainted with suspicions of drug abuse.

They watched in horror as a thug smashed skater Nancy Kerrigan's knee and a tale of treachery unfolded involving teammate Tonya Harding. They watched in wonder as Miss Kerrigan skated in the Olympics, bested only by a tiny Ukranian orphan named Oksana Baiul.

They watched as our incomparable Larry Bird said good-bye to basketball and Michael Jordan's number retired, then rehired.

They watched a former football hero, O.J. Simpson, acquitted of a horrifying double murder in what many described as the trial of the century.

They saw a federal building in Oklahoma bombed and 167 people killed in the worst act of terrorism the country had witnessed up to that point.

They witnessed the beginning of an all-out war against smoking and 100-year-old George Burns buried with his two favorite cigars.

They witnessed the world tied together with dot.com on the Internet. They witnessed mail become E. They saw reality become virtual.

In 1995, you went from being king of the hill in grammar school to the new kid on the block in junior high.

It was a strange year. Shannon Faulkner fought her way into the all-male Citadel military academy only to quit after a few days, and a million black men march on Washington at the behest of the widely distrusted Louis Farrakhan.

In 1999, you entered the hallowed halls of Cohassset Middle High School. You watched the new millennium dawn. You watched the world grapple with the Y2K scare, when all computers were supposed to come to a screeching halt.

Nothing could have prepared you for that fateful Tuesday morning in September, 2001 when you sat in your junior class.

Indelible images are imprinted on our minds which we will carry forever to remind us of the horror of the 9-11 terrorist attack which left 3,000 dead when two hijacked planes smashed into the World Trade Center in New York City, demolishing it. A third plane tore into the Pentagon in Washington, and a fourth plummeted into a field in Pennsylvania.

There were the images.

Little girls on a corner selling flags made out of beads.

Flags everywhere rippling softly in the wind across town.

"God Bless America" spelled out in paper cups on a chain link fence.

Our town leaders snapping into action within hours of the catastrophe and sitting around a table in town hall planning how to keep our community safe while horrific images flashed on a TV screen.

School children making patriotic pins for their teachers.

Others writing letters to the emergency crews in New York.

Almost everybody praying in local houses of worship.

Church bells tolling throughout the town.

Businesses displaying messages of hope.

Stunned faces everywhere.

Smoke on one tower and a fireball on the other as the World Trade Center was hit with jet planes which became flying bombs.

The employees slowly snaking their way down the narrow staircase to safety.

The rush to freedom by the lucky ones.

The muggers in New York jails asking for the Red Cross so they could donate blood.

The police officer who plummeted with the building's 89th floor and walked away.

The cell phone calls from the planes and the World Trade Center.

The son assuring his mother he loved her.

The reporter who called her husband collect to tell him the plane had been hijacked.

The fiancé who told his future wife, "Live for me."

The CEO of the company who lost all 700 employees, including his own brother, who kept stopping survivors on the street asking what floor they were on until the survivors stopped coming.

The group of firefighters who jumped into a subway to escape flying debris, dug themselves out, returned to the Trade Center, and were never heard from again.

The mayor of New York on his hands and knees scratching through the rubble for survivors.

The rescue of two firefighters in a crevice. "Good job, jakes," one said.

The passenger who called a family member from the hijacked Philadelphia plane and said that he and two other passengers were going to "do something." They did. The plane slammed into a field, instead of the White House.

The passport of one of the hijackers found intact amidst the debris.

The public address system in Tower 2 which told people they could go back to work.

The rescue workers so caked with soot.

The towers crumbling like sand castles.

The young father with his wife and child calling his mother from one of the doomed planes.

"Don't worry about us. It's going to be fast," he said.

The president vowing justice in the rubble.

The vice president saying this will be a war like no other, fought in dark alleys and mountain caves, with intelligence relying on secrets told to the most unsavory of characters.

The secretary of state saying this war on terrorism is going to take a long time.

We were still stunned as the war began, first in Afghanistan in a hunt for a man named Osama bin Laden, then in Iraq in the search for a dictator named Saddam Hussein.

Even our beloved Patriots winning the Superbowl five months after 9-11 could not take the edge off the pain.

We look to you, graduates, to bring peace to our world.

You have all the tools: youth, energy, idealism, and enthusiasm.

Perhaps in your class will be the Nobel Peace Prize winner who will show the world the error in terror.

Perhaps in your class will be the doctor who will cure AIDS or SARS.

Perhaps in your class will be the visionary who will stem the tide of violence in our streets.

Perhaps in your class will be the peacemaker who will put racism to rest forever.

Perhaps in your class will be the idealists who will conquer homelessness, illiteracy, and poverty.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Sticker shock

Dear Mr. Haddad and Selectman:

I do not usually do this but I am very upset about the recent article I read in the Mariner about the town no longer selling beach stickers and only selling "all-facility" stickers. My family only has one car that goes to the transfer station and has no need to have an all-facility sticker on the other car. My daughter just recently got her license and was looking forward to getting a beach sticker for her car and she too has no use for an all-facility sticker.

I have lived in this town for 18 years and my husband's family for many generations and the one joy I had was getting to go to the beach but not having to pay $30 to do so. I was very upset to also read in the article in the Mariner that one of the reasons for raising the cost of the sticker was not to "significantly increase revenue but will save a great deal of paperwork for the town clerk's office" and the article goes on to say that the "estimated the restructuring would result in an additional $6,000 of revenue."

Please make up your mind is the increase to get more revenue or to decrease paperwork because either excuse is a poor one. You should offer the townspeople an opportunity to use the natural resources of the town and not make a profit because the town owns the parking lot.

The committee should reconsider the idea of just a beach sticker and if you need more money to help cover the cost of trash removal and the parking lot, increase the price of the beach sticker to $10 or $15 (half the price of the all-facility sticker). This all-facility sticker is also not fair to those people who have a trash removal service and do not need to have a transfer station sticker. For the amount we pay in taxes and for the services offered in this town, please give the people a choice of what kind of sticker they have a need for. It is bad enough you force us to pay to dump our trash could we have the privilege of using the town parking lot of the beach for a reasonable price.

Water sale

To: Water Commissioners:

I'm not the complaining type but I do have a few concerns regarding the sale of water to Erikson Properties.

I understand you are trying to benefit the town financially. I also realize that you are trying to consider those of us in North Cohasset who pay a very high water rate from Aquarion Water Co.

Through all of this we certainly pay higher rates than others in town and we may be paying a higher rate than the people in Erickson communities — this doesn't seem right.

My other concern — aren't we interfering with desires and concerns of the Hingham town boards (e.g. Hingham Planning Board).

If this water is privately sold isn't this the same or similar situation our town boards (Planning, Conservation and Sewer) have with the town of Hull trying to sell sewer tie-in to a private developer, Jerusalem Rd. Estates?

Please understand I do respect your time and effort.

Thank you for considering my concerns.

House budget: What happened

YOUR REP

GARRETT BRADLEY

When a recession occurs, and people lose their jobs, they stop paying income taxes and the state falls into a deeper recession. Raising the income tax will not solve our problem.

I wanted to take this opportunity to update you on the House budget process. As you read this, the Senate has also concluded its budget debate and any differences will now be resolved by the conference committee which consists of three members of the House and three members of the Senate. This group is scheduled to report back in June so that we will hopefully have a budget on Governor Romney's desk by July 1.

• Revenue — The House budget debate began with a two-day debate on raising new revenues. As I did last year, I voted against an increase in the personal income tax. Revenue used in our state budget is derived from several sources, with the majority coming from the personal income tax (58 percent). This is the third highest percentage in the country, and it is a significant cause of our $3 billion budget gap. When a recession occurs, and people lose their jobs, they stop paying income taxes and the state falls into a deeper recession. Raising the income tax will not solve our problem.

I did support a short-term borrowing plan that would have raised $300 million. This plan would have offset cuts in several areas, including cuts to local aid. If this plan had been approved, the interest rate would have been about 3 percent and the note would have been for five years. Currently, we have approximately $500 million in our Health Care liability trust fund (from the tobacco settlement) and this would have been used as collateral for this loan. Unfortunately, the Legislature did not approve this plan and we went into our budget debate with the task of cutting $3 billion out of a $23 billion budget. This was a difficult task but it had to be done.

• $3 Billion Dollar Deficit — Since 1993, the budget has grown in two specific areas with one growing intentionally and one growing unintentionally. The intentional area was local aid which was increased from approximately $1 billion to approximately $5 billion and was directed mostly to increase educational funding. The unintentional area was Mass Health, our version of Medicaid, which is paid 50 percent from the state and 50 percent from the federal government. The program covers many low-income residents. This program has grown from approximately $1.8 billion in 1993 to $6 billion this year. In three years, it will be $10 billion. Governor Romney is correct when he says we cannot wait for the federal government to restructure the program, we must take difficult steps.

Add to this a recession, which has been worse in our state than other areas of the country because of our reliance on the High Tech industry which lost many jobs. Also, factor in the loss of significant capital gains revenue. These taxes, which approached about $1 billion a year in 2001, are now about $200 million.

• The Budget Debate — Unlike past years, every dollar we put into one area during this budget debate was unfortunately taken from another. Without a balanced budget however, we would cause more harm to our fragile economy. Painful cuts are being made because they are unavoidable.

We were able to put together a plan that funds the prescription advantage program. This is a critical program that provides low cost prescription drugs for our seniors and I have supported it since it inception.

I sponsored adopted amendments to support our school building assistance program because I believe the state must keep its word to communities that have relied on this program. Otherwise, this funding would be an additional burden on the taxpayers.

I, and many of my suburban colleagues, fought for an amendment to use certain accounts to lessen the impact on those communities that received the highest local aid cuts. These accounts, known as "pot hole" accounts, are used by the Governor to assist communities who find themselves short of funds as the year progresses. We wanted to use the money in these accounts for our communities now, but we were not successful.

The budget also undertook many reforms, some of which the Governor proposed. The MDC was merged with the Department of Environmental Management. The legislators' micromanaging of the court system was lessened, and the reorganization of Health and Human Services Department occurred as the Governor proposed. Significant Medicaid reforms were adopted and the amount public employees contribute to their healthcare was increased which brought us more in line with the private sector.

If there are certain areas of the budget where you have questions, please do not hesitate to contact me. This was an extremely difficult and I am mindful of the ramifications some of our difficult decisions carry for our district. I continue to believe however, that these decisions must be made now if we are to recover from this fiscal crisis. I have, and will continue, to work to provide you with an honest assessment, whether positive or negative, of our budget situation. I look forward to your comments.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley represents the Third Plymouth District of Hingham, Hull, Cohasset and one precinct in Scituate.

The pros and cons of Senate budget

HEDLUND REPORT

BOB HEDLUND

In addition to $500 million in fee increases, the Senate budget also contained a number of non-budgetary matters which led to me ultimately voting against the bill.

Last week the Senate wrapped up debate on its more than $22.5 billion budget for fiscal year 2004. While I believe the Senate could have adopted more reforms to Massachusetts state government, this budget was a large improvement over the House's budget passed in early May. Unlike that budget, the Senate adopts a true consolidation of the Metropolitan District Commission with the Department of Environmental Management and substantial reforms to the Office of Health and Human Services among other important reforms to the Judiciary and Board of Higher Education. These reforms are critical for long-term savings and efficiencies. This budget also shares many of the spending priorities important to my constituents on the South Shore. The Senate budget fully funds the Prescription Advantage program important to seniors across the Commonwealth. And, most importantly, it provides a slightly larger amount of Chapter 70 education aid to our communities.

My largest disappointment with the Senate budget is the large number of broad based "fee" proposals and increases included to keep this budget balanced. While it rejects increases to the income, sales and property taxes, the Senate did truly increase taxes on people by passing them off as fees. A fee, as determined by law, is an amount charged for a particular government service. However, most of the "fee" proposals in the Senate budget go beyond this definition as they are specifically designed to simply generate revenue for the Commonwealth. In essence, these "fees" really are taxes. All we would have needed to do to avoid the increases is enact additional reforms to generate further savings. One of the more outrageous fee proposals was that of a surcharge on homeowners' insurance policies. I led a successful effort to repeal this outrageous 'fee' proposal. Unfortunately, most of the other fee increases were included in the budget.

In addition to the more than $500 million in fee increases on the citizens and business owners across the Commonwealth, the Senate budget also contained a number of non-budgetary matters which led to me ultimately voting against the bill. Among other measures, the Senate continued the Legislature's practice of ignoring the will of Massachusetts voters by carving exemptions to the voter approved English Immersion law as well as passing a repeal of the clean elections law passed overwhelmingly by voters in 1998. The budget also sought to revive the anti-business climate of the late 1980's by passing comprehensive corporate reporting legislation as part of the budget. This reporting would require businesses to turn over more sensitive, private information than any other state in the nation, and would certainly lead to jobs being lost in Massachusetts. These provisions are a poison pill in an otherwise well-crafted budget document.

The following are some highlights of the Senate Budget:

• Prescription Advantage — The Senate budget took the lead on the important issue of providing drug coverage for Massachusetts' seniors by retaining the Prescription Advantage program. The budget also calls for reforms to the way in which the Commonwealth purchases prescription drugs that will save Massachusetts taxpayers millions of dollars. Since the inception of this first-in-the-nation program, we have been searching for a way to continue this program without further burdening the Commonwealth's taxpayers. This year we have come up with innovate solutions that should permit for the continuance of this program for years to come.

• School Building Assistance — I was pleased when the Senate Budget was released with funding for initial payments for the School Building Assistance program. I lobbied for this funding on behalf of my district and its inclusion was a strong sign of support for the program, as the initial House budget proposal did not fund those accounts. We also passed amendments, including one that I co-sponsored, that will help stabilize the program. One of those amendments would increase the term of borrowing from 7 to 10 years. As the waiting list grows even larger, this would help those towns until they begin to receive their reimbursements from the state.

• Local Priorities — In addition to funding for Prescription Advantage and the School Building Assistance program, I lobbied for the inclusion of a number of important local priorities for the South Shore. An amendment I sponsored resulted in the retention of a $200,000 grant for the South Shore Tri-Town Development Corporation. This important economic development grant will make sure that work continues on redeveloping the former Naval Air Station in South Weymouth. Also, Summer police patrols for Nantasket Beach were funded at a level of $280,000. These patrols are important to maintaining the quality of life for Hull residents as Nantasket Beach draws over 500,000 visitors each summer. Another appropriation of $54,000 was included for a substance abuse program at the Hingham District Court. Also, a $500,000 earmark was secured for the continued operation of the Talking Information Center in Marshfield.

Bob Hedlund is state Senator for the Plymouth-Norfolk District that includes Weymouth, Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Norwell, Scituate, Marshfield and Duxbury.

HEALTH NOTES

Helmets are protective armor; they can save lives

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Helmets can reduce the risk of head injury by up to 85 percent for bicycles for example. Most deaths related to bicycle falls and collisions involve head injuries.

Armor. The world seems to fluctuate between the offensive and the defensive. Our current military helmet, for example, can trace its roots through the German Stahlheim to the medieval kettle hat, or chapel de fer. Given to us by nature as in the clam, the turtle, and the armadillo, and used by humans, (only occasionally, and sporadically, and modified even more slowly!) armor currently appears to be in vogue. Frequently, these vagaries occur because of the persuasiveness of those with special interests, regardless of the validity of the choice. According to those who study the art, helmets have made a surprising comeback, beginning with the hardhat used by workers in the high iron days of prewar riveted skyscrapers of the 20's to WW2 warriors until now.

First for, horse riders, bikers (motor), then bicyclists, skiers, skateboarders, etc., helmets have become de rigueur. Now, the helmet can be a fashion statement. Also, some see laws requiring helmets as an abridgment of rights. But the ostensible reason for most helmets is to augment protection of that fundamental piece of armor, the skull. Accident statistics routinely attest to the added safety that head protection gives us. But, as with every other modern convenience, it is necessary to apply our armor with diligence and reason. The first safeguard is to see to it if it's needed, as are seatbelts, that it's used, and that use becomes habit. For many, getting into a car and not fastening seat belts makes the ride uncomfortable, even intolerable. So, if it's necessary, should be the use of head protection.

Helmets can reduce the risk of head injury by up to 85 percent for bicycles for example. Most deaths related to bicycle falls and collisions involve head injuries. This means that wearing a helmet can save your life. Each year, bicycle-related deaths number about 900, and United States hospital emergency rooms treat more than 500,000 people for bicycle-related injuries. More children, ages 5 to 14, go to United States hospital emergency rooms for injuries associated with bicycles than with any other sport. Many of these injuries involve the head. If you do not wear a bicycle helmet, you may be risking your life. In addition, helmets used for bicycles can be used for other forms of exercise, such as in line and roller skating Those who skateboard or do more aggressive (trick or freestyle) skating may want to look for helmets sold specifically for these activities that meet safety standards for these sports. These helmets cover more of the head, especially in the back. Of course for many of these sports, other forms of armor, wrist guards, knee pads, and elbow pads will offer additional body protection.

But use of head protection contains an element of judgment. When football players changed over from leather helmets to plastic in the 1950's, the incidence of neck injuries nearly tripled. Similarly, use of helmets by young bicycle riders may be accompanied by reductions in vision, balance problems or other negative effects. It's up to parents to ensure that their children are aided by those safety devices which are being so broadly marketed. As usual, judgment and reason, accompanied by a little common sense is as important as the protection given by today's modern defensive armor.

Many states and local jurisdictions have laws requiring bicycle helmet use. Check with the Board of Health about Massachusetts laws on helmets.

Rising tide of nudity is no longer limited to beaches

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Most recently, some 85 passengers left their clothes behind and boarded a plane at Miami Airport on what was billed as the world's first nude flight to a resort not far from Cancun...

I know it's a long reach to be writing about nakedness with the June temperature hovering around the freezing mark, but word has just filtered down to me that membership in the American Association for Nude Recreation has risen 75 per cent to 50,000 in the last 12 years.

And if any of you good folk are recently unemployed and casting about for something to do while you're waiting for your ship to come back in, nude recreation and travel as a business now has an annual take of $400 million, an increase of more than 230 per cent since 1992.

Take that, Anthony Comstock, and that, Watch and Ward Society!

The new interest in nudism — or naturism, as the folks who practice it like to say — extends far beyond naked people —or bollicky, as we used to call them — lolling about the beach or playing volleyball or posing for pictures that will appear in magazines that won't appear on the newsstand.

The DeAnza Spring Resort, a nudist colony — or clothing optional camp, as they like to call it — some 70 miles east of San Diego, Calif., is planning a nude dinner train excursion next fall. The menu has not yet been announced but it will probably feature lamb chops, the kind you put panties on.

The most successful excursion so far has been the 10-day voyage of the Carnival Cruise Lines' good ship "Ecstasy" up and down the Pacific coast of Mexico in late February that drew 2,000 fun-loving males and females who didn't have to worry about what to wear for dinner at the captain's table.

Most recently, some 85 passengers left their clothes behind and boarded a plane at Miami Airport on what was billed as the world's first nude flight to a resort not far from Cancun, Mexico, for a week devoted to getting tanned all over. No, the stewardess did not offer "hot coffee, tea or me." Only lukewarm beverages were allowed.

In case you're interested in something more local, the Boston Herald last Sunday reminded us that July 7-13 is Nude Recreation Week, during which the 50,000 members of the American Association for Nude Recreation and the 27,000 members of the Naturist Society sponsor special events, like naked beach runs, for new nudists.

If you take them up on their offer, you'll be one up in me. I've never been to a nudist colony or a naturist resort, but I came close once. The assistant editor of the place where I worked in New York some 40 years ago, had an idea one day — usual people doing unusual things.

Hugh Mulligan was to visit a nudist camp. Dave Bowen was to jump from an airplane, with a parachute, of course. I was to spar a round with Ingemar Johansson, who was in the states to defend his world heavyweight boxing championship against Floyd Patterson.

Fortunately, as soon as the boss editor found out that one of his writers was fixing to jump out of an airplane, that idea was scrapped and when the sparring session was proposed to Ingemar Johansson's manager, he stopped laughing long enough to say "no!" But not before Mulligan visited the nudist camp.

He approached his fellow naturists with some trepidation, he told us, with certain parts of him hidden behind a copy of the New York Herald Tribune. As he lay on the beach, a young lady, naked as a jaybird, paused beside him and glanced down at his newspaper.

"May I see your sporting section?" she asked.

Bulger issue raises questions about state of 'Big-D' politics

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

Attorney General Thomas Reilly completely set the Hill on its ear with his front-page call for UMass President William Bulger to step aside. It raised lots of questions about the state of big-D Democratic politics in Massachusetts — this one, for example, which would absolutely not have occurred to anyone in state politics: is this the Democratic party of Thomas Reilly, or Bill Bulger?

Most urgently it raised the fundamental Massachusetts political question, which probably was first voiced in about 1629 as: "Prithee, what lieth behind this queer gambit?" Nowadays, people say: "What's that all about?" And that's what people wanted to know.

Normally, everyone's got a theory when a major figure does something startling. But this was so unusual "I just don't know" was as common a reaction as "Here's my guess." The answer probably encompasses parts of several different motivations.

First, there's what he said on the surface: Reilly doesn't care for the unfortunate spectacle created by Bulger's loyalty to his Most Wanted brother on one hand and his leadership of an institution supposedly devoted to the fearless quest for truth on the other. A lot of people agree; a lot disagree. Also, like many of his prosecutorial ilk, Reilly does have a track record of making attention-getting, combative moves. He made negative comments early about Cardinal Law, and opened an investigation of the Big Dig, and refused to let go of the Microsoft case.

What else could be going on? Reilly issued a standard disavowal of any ulterior or political stimulus for his criticism of Bulger's behavior. But politicians keep most of their impolite thoughts to themselves, and Reilly managed to do so for the many years Bulger was caught in his conflict. Why voice them now?

The governor and the media have made Bulger the personification of what's amiss with the political system in Massachusetts. Reilly's now the leading Democratic figure in state-level politics; few think his career will pass without a gubernatorial campaign; he may not want Gov. Romney completely co-opting the Bulger issue as 2004 approaches. It did not go unnoticed that the Democratic state convention was last weekend, nor that Reilly has a fundraiser June 19. Actually, it went very noticed.

Finally, one Bulger loyalist noted – bitterly – that Reilly may be attempting to solve the basic problem of politics: name recognition. A recent poll, by UMass of all places, showed 24 percent of respondents had no idea who Reilly was, and that's no way to run for governor.

"What other issue could you have picked to have a major impact to get your name out there?" the Bulger ally pointed out. However sincere Reilly's opinion may be, Bulger himself made no bones about the AG's decision to voice it. Bulger called it "shameless."

The Bulger/Reilly spectacle made the front page, but the issues of more importance for the people running the government went underreported. That was action to reform the office Bulger leads, and votes, or a lack thereof, on strategies to help municipalities grapple with the budget crisis.

• Senate spares Bulger's office — Senators went along with their colleagues who argued, whatever the issues of personality may be, the functions of the office of UMass President are too valuable to do without, and a central office is the best way to pursue them. Both sides wind up making the same argument: that the question of who holds the office should not be collapsed with the issue of whether the office should continue.

• House passes moderate package of local relief — Details of the many changes to the plan were somewhat hard to come by because the process was so cryptic, but the broad form of the House-passed plan was clear. Representatives declined to give local officials the power to levy new taxes at the municipal level. The bill contained a variety of strategies leaders promise will lower the cost of running local government. One notable provision would exempt payments into "overlay" funds from the tax limits of Prop. 2-1/2. Overlay funds are maintained to rebate taxes of property owners who are over-assessed.

• Revenues surge again — The revenue crisis may be over – that is, the part of the revenue crisis where collections shock and appall officials by persistently falling below projections. May revenues exceeded May 2002 collections by 18.7 percent, the first time since 1999 that revenues have shown a year-ago increase for three straight months. Combined with what some analysts said was the end of the bear market, the leading indicators were finally starting to look okay. The budget crisis is far from over, though; government inflation is running at 4 percent, and revenues are only expected rise 1 percent in Fiscal 2004.

• Legislative pay raise enacted — Just after the local-government measure was passed, representatives gave a final vote of approval to a bill allowing the Speaker and Senate President to raise the pay of their top leadership without going through the legislative process. Enactment came without a roll call.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

By Bob Katzen
beaconhill@aol.com
June 2-6, 2003

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on five roll calls and local senators' votes on two roll calls from the week of June 2-6.

Senator Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) (617) 722-1646 Room 413F

MUNICIPAL RELIEF PACKAGE (H 4002)
House 133-21, gave near final approval to and sent to the Senate a municipal relief package giving local cities and towns more management flexibility, fiscal choices and revenue raising options in order to compensate for this year's cuts is local aid. Provisions include an increase in the maximum fine for parking violations, failure to stop and blocking intersections; increased fees for towing, gun registration, fire department permits and civil processes; allowing local communities to exempt their overlay accounts from the allowable tax hike limits of Proposition 2 1/2; permitting school districts to charge students in kindergarten through sixth grade for bus transportation to school; allowing municipal treasurers to use a twice-monthly payroll system rather than a weekly one; allowing communities to offer early retirement incentive programs and to reduce this fiscal year's unfunded pension liability payment by an amount equal to their loss in local aid and authorizing cities and towns to work with the Registry of Motor Vehicles to design and sell distinctive vehicle license plates and keep the profits. Supporters said the package is a fiscally responsible one that does not raise taxes but gives local communities the tools to increase revenues and make up for the deep cuts in local aid. Opponents said the package does not offer sufficient relief to make up for deep local aid cuts, raises too many fees and hikes property taxes. Some noted the package misses many opportunities including raising $328 million by legalizing slot machines. (A "Yea" vote is for the package. A "Nay" vote is against it). — Y

CHANGE PROPOSITION 2 1/2 (H 4002)
House 91-62, approved an amendment allowing local communities, if approved by voters, to exempt their "overlay" accounts from the allowable tax hike limits of Proposition 2 1/2. Proposition 2 1/2 is a state law that limits annual local property tax increases to 2.5 percent of the prior year's tax plus new growth unless voters override that limit on a ballot question. Overlay accounts include funds that communities are mandated to set aside for tax abatements for property owners whose properties have been over assessed. Exempting the overlay accounts means that communities can raise property taxes to fund their overlay accounts on top of raising taxes to the maximum amount allowed by Proposition 2 1/2. Amendment supporters said communities could use this new revenue to pay for important local services like public safety and education. They noted it is unfair that a community is restricted in raising property taxes but is forced to set aside some of its property tax revenue in an overlay account where it can sit for years. Amendment opponents said the amendment violates Proposition 2 1/2 and is simply a property tax hike that will cost taxpayers millions of dollars. They noted communities already have the ability to override Prop 2 1/2. Some argued that with this new exemption, communities would be tempted to over assess more properties in order to build up the overlay fund that essentially would become a slush fund raised outside the limits of Proposition 2 1/2. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment allowing the exemption. A "Nay" vote is against allowing the exemption). — N

ONE PERCENT LOCAL MEALS TAX (H 4002)
House 63-95, rejected an amendment allowing cities and towns to impose a one percent restaurant meals tax. The tax would take effect only if approved by a city council, city council and mayor, town meeting or town council-- depending on the community's form of government. Amendment supporters said this would simply allow, not require, communities to impose the tax and have the opportunity to raise revenue to make up for local aid cuts. Amendment opponents said a tax hike is unwarranted and argued it could hurt local restaurants. Some noted they would support this local option tax if it would be subject to approval by local voters. (A "Yea" vote is for the meals tax. A "Nay" vote is against the meals tax). — N

ALLOW SLOT MACHINES AT FOUR RACETRACKS (H 4002)
House 59-97, rejected an amendment allowing 1500 slot machines at each of the state's four racetracks. Fifty percent of revenues from the profits of each machine would be distributed as local aid under the current lottery aid formula while 44.4 percent would go to the owners of the tracks. The remaining 5.6 percent would go to the host community, contiguous communities, law enforcement, a fund to help compulsive gamblers and horse racetracks' "purses"-- money which goes to jockeys, horse breeders and horse farms. Another provision creates a formula that requires each track to compensate the state for any shortfall in State Lottery growth. Amendment supporters said the state's annual share of the slot machine revenue is estimated at $328 million in much needed dollars that would make up for deep cuts in local aid. They noted that allowing the machines would create many new jobs and permit adult citizens to play the slots in Massachusetts instead of supporting them at casinos in Connecticut. Amendment opponents said legalizing slots would open a legal route that would eventually lead to recognized Indian tribes being allowed to open casinos in Massachusetts. They argued that the projected revenue estimates are excessive and do not take into account increased financial and social costs from public safety problems, increased traffic, compulsive gambling and loss in State Lottery revenues. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment allowing the 6000 slot machines. A "Nay" vote is against allowing the 6000 slot machines). — Y

STUDY GAS TAX EXEMPTION FOR CITIES AND TOWNS (H 4002)
House 105-49, approved an amendment prohibiting a proposal exempting cities and towns' vehicles fuel purchases from the 21 cents per gallon gas tax from taking effect until the Department of Revenue studies the economic impact of the exemption and the House and Senate Ways and Means Committees approve it. Supporters of the study said the proposal is attractive but noted that the actual cost is unknown and is probably a lot higher. They argued the study will simply allow accurate estimates of the costs and impact and noted that the Taxation Committee should hold a public hearing on the idea. Opponents of the study said it would essentially kill the proposal. They noted the exemption, mirroring a federal one already in effect for communities, would save cities and towns between $10 million and $15 million that they could use to make up for local aid cuts. They argued this would simply replace the current system under which communities pay the gas tax to the state that then distributes the revenue as local aid. (A "Yea" vote is for the study. A "Nay" vote is against the study). — Y

ROMNEY'S HIGHER EDUCATION REORGANIZATION (H 3902)
Senate 6-33, rejected Gov. Romney's reorganization package making major changes in the state's higher education system including eliminating the office of UMass President William Bulger. Under state law, the package can only be approved or rejected but cannot be amended. Supporters said this reorganization is long overdue and will save millions of dollars while improving the accessibility and quality of higher education. They noted that eliminating Bulger's duplicative and unnecessary office and reassigning the office's responsibilities to the existing chancellors on each of the five campuses would save $14 million. Opponents said the package is flawed and would hurt the effectiveness, efficiency and accountability of the state's higher education system. They noted that the Senate prefers to work with the governor on various legislation to improve higher education rather than being forced to simply vote up or down on one package without the ability to offer amendments. (A "Yea" vote is for the package. A "Nay" vote is against the package). — Y

ROMNEY'S GOVERNMENT REORGANIZATION (H 3901)
Senate 7-32, rejected Gov. Romney's reorganization package making major changes in the structure and operation of state government. The package makes changes to most executive offices, combines some offices and agencies and completely eliminates others. Under state law, the package can only be approved or rejected but cannot be amended. Supporters said the package would bring state government into the 21st century and give the governor and his cabinet the tools necessary to better manage with fewer resources. They argued it will save millions of dollars and give taxpayers a government that runs smarter and more efficiently. They noted that they do not agree with the entire package but urged its approval and said that the legislature can make changes following House and Senate approval of the package. Opponents said they agree with some parts of the package but disagree with others and urged its rejection since the Senate is not allowed to amend it. They noted that many of the reforms have already been approved as part of the recently-approved House and Senate budgets and said that more reforms will soon be considered by the legislature in a thoughtful and cooperative process rather than with an up or down vote on one package. (A "Yea" vote is for the package. A "Nay" vote is against the package). — Y

History buffs collaborate on guide to 13 South Shore sites

Open house day is June 28

By John Galluzzo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

It all started with a shared lunch conversation in May of 2001. Sally Leonard, a director of the Alden House Historic Site, had joined 40 or so other travelers at Mystic Seaport Museum for a bus visit to the Scituate Maritime & Irish Mossing Museum and Scituate Lighthouse, and halfway through the day sat down to lunch with the executive director of the Scituate Historical Society. They swapped some basic thoughts on collaboration between their respective non-profit organizations, and agreed to meet to discuss the ideas further. Within a month, representatives from both groups met for the first time in Duxbury, joined by friendly faces and eager partners from Marshfield's Winslow House and the Duxbury Rural and Historical Society.

From that one lunch conversation in Scituate Harbor has grown an undertaking of major proportions, but one that is being met with great enthusiasm. After tackling their first task and figuring out what to call themselves, the member organizations of Back Roads of the South Shore discussed the potential for a one-day, collaborative open house event. On Saturday, June 28, a year's worth of hard work and preparation toward that ultimate goal will come to fruition.

In the year since that first meeting, the group has expanded to include a total of 13 historic sites in seven communities. Recent meetings have gotten so large that the member organizations have had to limit themselves to sending only one representative each. For all involved, the idea of too much enthusiasm is not a bad problem at all to have.

"This has been a very exciting project," said Regina Porter, executive director of the Winslow House at the group's late May meeting. "It has really put us all in touch with each other. We're sharing information on so many other levels, apart from planning for the open house day."

The group's first tangible joint project bore fruit this week, when Patrick Browne, executive director of the Duxbury Rural and Historical Society, received 20,000 copies of the first Back Roads of the South Shore brochure and map. The full-color, eight-panel foldout features a Hingham to Plymouth map highlighting each of the 13 historic sites open on June 28. The brochures can be picked up at any of the member sites, through the Plymouth County Convention and Visitors Bureau (PCCVB), Destination Plymouth, and the Radisson Hotel in Plymouth. The Radisson, PCCVB, and Jack Conway & Company Realtors have each donated funds in support of the printing of the brochure, while Norm Forgit of Norman R. Forgit Graphic Design provided volunteer labor and the Patriot Ledger and the Plymouth County Development Council offered free advertising space to help spread the word.

"We think it's wonderful and it's important that all of the societies on the South Shore are working together like this and we're glad to be a part of it any way we can."
— Kathy O'Malley, Cohasset Historical Society

The Back Roads tour as designed carries visitors to the homes and stopping places of the region's early settlers that border historic Route 3A. In downtown Hingham, the Hingham Historical Society's Old Ordinary will be the first stop for a driver headed north to south, and a trip past Hingham Harbor and then through the beautiful Cohasset Common area leads to the Cohasset Historical Society's Captain John Wilson House in Cohasset Center. A drive up Country Way brings the next site, Scituate's Cudworth House, to view in the shadow of Thomas W. Lawson's famous water tower. After walking through the Scituate Garden Club's prize-winning Wildflower Garden on the grounds of the Mann House, it's back on 3A to cross the North River for a visit to the 1699 Isaac Winslow House and Daniel Webster law office.

In Duxbury, the Rural and Historical Society will open two sites, the King Caesar and Gershom Bradford Houses, while the Alden Kindred will lead tours through the Alden House Historic Site. In Kingston, the Jones River Village Historical Society will open the Major John Bradford House, and will also reveal for the first time their newest exhibit, on Jones River shipbuilding, at the grand opening of their restored barn. Plymouth offers three small homes of the early families, the Spooner, Jabez Howland, and Harlow Old Fort Houses. All of these sites will be open from 11a.m.-3 p.m., free of charge. The Pilgrim Hall Museum will join the fun by holding a special discount day, sponsored by Compass Bank. Youngsters up to age seventeen will get in free, while adults will pay just $3 each.

Following the open house hours, the group will gather at the Winslow House for a reception to celebrate the day's events, from 4-6 p.m. Raffle prizes will be drawn, a live band will be performing, and other surprises may arise as well. The reception will be open to the public.

Kathy O'Malley, co-president of the Cohasset Historical Society, said that although the 1810 Captain John Wilson House, which is listed on the National Register of Historic Places, will not be open on the day of the event, due to restoration work that will be taking place this summer, the Society will have a volunteer on hand to talk about the history of the site and answer any questions visitors may have.

"We think it's wonderful and it's important that all of the societies on the South Shore are working together like this," she said, "and we're glad to be a part of it any way we can." She also hopes to see an expansion of the group's focus in the future. "It would be nice to involve other historical societies, not necessarily just on Route 3A, to cooperate with seminars, programming, and more."

O'Malley's co-president, Paula Kozol, foresees a greater pooling of talent and resources in the future as well. A veteran museum professional with experience at Boston's Museum of Fine Arts and the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, Kozol has been impressed with the Back Roads group's enthusiasm and cooperation. She would also like to see the group's interests expand to include a focus on other museum world needs such as archival storage, curatorial practices, proper artifact preservation techniques, and other topics that would prove to be mutually beneficial to all of the organizations involved.

"I'm a member of MOB (Museums of Boston), which is more focused on marketing and public relations. This group differs from MOB in that it could run the whole range of collaborative programming," Kozol says. "I'd like to see us bring in speakers on specific museum subjects, hold seminars, and find other ways to take advantage of our partnership."

Paula Fisher, Marketing Manager for the Plymouth County Convention and Visitors Bureau, is thankful for the group's efforts as well. "Any time you cross town boundaries in cultural tourism helps the county, and it helps the state. And in the current economy, people are going to have to do things like this to survive, to cooperate to work to get the word out about what's going on in Plymouth County."

Watching the tourism industry's larger trends, Fisher has been both an active participant in the Back Roads meetings and a careful observer. "It's not easy to do something like this. They've all done their own individual thing for so long. It's just super that they've come together. People will be taking low-key, closer to home vacations again this year, and this is the perfect way to start."

Girls tennis team to play Tantasqua for state title today

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

How good is the girls tennis team this year? They made it to the Sectional finals, something that had never before been done in the history of the program at Cohasset.

And then they went two rounds further.

State Div. 2 girls tennis championship
Cohasset vs. Tantasqua
Today, 3:30 p.m., Clark University

The Swingin' Skippers aced, volleyed and groundstroked their way to their first ever South Sectional title, topping Bourne with alarming ease, 4-1, last Friday. Then on Monday, the team won what was the closest and most exciting tennis match, nay, athletic event that this reporter has ever witnessed. The Lady Skippers defeated last year's state champs, Manchester-Essex, in a heart-pounding 3-2 decision at Newton South High School.

"We knew [the team] had to play their best tennis," said a very relieved Gigi Meehan moments after the win. "These girls know how to win."

Cohasset drew first blood in the match against Manchester-Essex, with first singles sophomore Elizabeth Stone proving her consummate abilities with a 6-2, 6-1 win. Despite taking on the ace of the top ranked high school team in the state, Stone was highly respected by her opponent, senior Megan Kara, evidenced in the lobs and junkballs Kara was hitting.

With Cohasset up a match, Manchester-Essex drew even at second singles, with Hornets junior Sarah Rich coming away with a 6-4, 6-1 clean victory over Cohasset's senior captain Lindsay Grossman.

M-E then made things very interesting with their phenomenal first doubles team winning the North Sectional champs second point of the day. The junior twin duo of Marni and Kara Powers displayed an array of quick handed volleys and powerful serves rarely seen in men's high school doubles. The twins, a lefty-righty pair seemingly engineered to play doubles together, took a three set victory over senior Julie Shea and junior Courtney Caron.

The team of Shea and Caron, one that made it to the ultra-elite Round of Eight at the State Individuals tournament last month, were, for the first time, overpowered to a loss. The pair played extremely well, actually taking the middle set in a tiebreaker, but the aptly named Powers sisters moved to 70-0 for their varsity careers.

Cohasset's DeWayne Morris (#22) shakes his defender to score a goal during the Skippers' 18-2 rout of Tri-County in the opening round of the state tourney last week. Unfortunately, the CHS laxmen wound up falling to Ipswich in the semifinals on Monday, 11-6.

Dreams die hard

Ipswich shuts downs CHS laxmen in semis

The dreams died hard.

Cohasset's 16-game win streak and state championship aspirations came to an end on Monday, as the Ipswich Tigers took a 3-1 first quarter lead, and fought off every Skipper attempt to make a run, advancing to the Division 3 finals with an 11-6 victory.

Cohasset's game plan had been built around several keys – to control face-offs, play disciplined defense, clear effectively, and attack the Ipswich zone from behind the goal – and in every case, the Skippers were frustrated.

For Cohasset's eight seniors – John Durkin, Robert Hickey, Tom Anderson, Evan Pestone, Ben Lynner, Nick Spirito and Curt Kahn – the season's conclusion was abrupt and unexpected, but couldn't offset the luster of wins over archrivals Hingham and Norwell, and decisive victories over Marshfield, Falmouth and Milton.

"You've established this program's reputation in the past three years," coach Kevin Orcutt told his seniors after the game, "and that's a legacy to be proud of."

On Monday night, however, only senior Curt Kahn could find the back of the net with

Krupczak, Silvia, 4x8 team shine at All-State meet

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

"Not bad for 10 guys and eight girls. The boys took 12th overall at the Class meet, and the girls were 13th, their first top 15 finish in my time here."
Cohasset High track coach Al LaFountain

The All-State meet wasn't all the Cohasset High track team hoped it would be but, on the balance, it was a positive ending to an extremely positive season

The girls 4x800 relay team of Mary Silvia, Jenn Buckley, Nicole Whitney and Lisa Musto shaved a remarkable 15 seconds off its best time at this past Saturday's All-State track meet at Norwell High, shattering the school record. The run of 10:03.99 was good for 16th place in an extremely strong field. It seems likely this mark and placement will be challenged next year, as all four members of the team return, Buckley and Whitney being juniors, Silvia a sophomore and Musto a freshman.

"That team really peaked at the end of the season, and I'm looking forward to seeing what they can do with another year of experience," said fifth year CHS coach Al LaFountain.

Silvia wrapped up her sensational solo campaign in style as well, racing to a ninth place finish in the 800, tying her personal best time of 2:22.75.

The highest finish for any Cohasset athlete, though, was delivered by senior Jared Krupczak in the 200-meter race. The team co-captain shook off the lingering effects of a hamstring strain to finish with the eighth fastest time in the preliminary race. Jared's 23.32-second run in the morning qualified him for the afternoon championship heat. However, he opted to attend his high school graduation rather than run in the finals.

"Considering the field and that Jared still wasn't 100 percent, you could see where he was coming from," stated LaFountain.

As the finals turned out, however, the coach feels Krupczak would have had a legitimate shot, had he run, at a top six finish and a qualifier for this weekend's New England track championships. Sixth place was taken by Marian's Dan Connell in a time of 23:41, a showing LaFountain definitely believes his star sprinter could have challenged, even at less than 100 percent.

Krupczak and fellow team captain Ian Kidder made the decision before the All-State meet to attend graduation on Saturday rather than compete in afternoon events. This decision cost not only Krupczak a chance to race, but also the 4x100 relay team that was seeded 18th for the race, with Krupczak and Kidder both members of the squad. The other two members were sophomore Peter Bunstein and junior Eric Belz.

It was a decision, though, that was made with the full support of their coach.

"I backed them no matter what their decision was," said LaFountain. "I'm sure there was pressure pulling them both ways, but they thought it out, and saw that (their 4x100 relay team) probably wasn't going to be top 10 anyway. It wasn't an easy decision for them. It's just unfortunate the two big events had to take place on the same day."

"They've been working just about their whole lives toward graduation, and only four to six years for this All-State meet. Their decision was certainly understandable, and I back it completely."

Krupczak, however, was bitterly disappointed by the way things turned out. After grabbing the eighth and final qualifying

Boys tennis team to rebuild on the fly again next year

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The 2004 boys tennis team will take a major hit through graduation, losing three starters from a team that only had the minimum seven players to compete. But even if just four or fewer come out for the team at the start of next year's spring season, don't hit the panic button.

Logic tells me the shortage of players will only lead to a fourth consecutive trip to the playoffs. Hear me out.

In 2002, the team lost South Shore League all-stars Erik Shea, Jeff Scribner and Chris Golden, and actually only had three names at the start of the season. After heavy recruiting, the team put together a list of nine athletes, and went to playoffs with an 8-6 record, 8-4 in league, good for second place in the South Shore League.

This year, the team lost no one to graduation, but several to the newly formed Cohasset Ping Pong Club (CPPC), and the team had only five registered players at the start of the season. Once again, miraculously, the team ended up with a full line-up. With an empty bench all season, actually playing short-handed several times between school trips and injuries, the team again went to the playoffs with an 8-8 record and put up a terrific fight in the first round with a 3-2 loss to Mansfield (number seven seed with a 15-3 record).

So, if history is indeed going to repeat itself, the '04 edition of the tennis Skippers should be just fine.

Next year, the team will be helped immensely by the rapidly blossoming Middle School program, with many talented male and female players eager to make contributions to future varsity teams. This year in the South Shore League, a Mashpee

Cohasset's Mary Silvia (#70) stayed right in the think of things, as seen here, in the 800-meter race at Saturday's All-State track meet. Silvia wrapped up her sensational sophomore campaign in style, racing to a ninth place finish here against the best the state had to offer.

Cohasset first doubles partners Julie Shea (left) and Courtney Caron lost of the first time this season, dropping a straight sets decision to Manchester-Essex super duo Mami and Kara Powers (70-0 for their career),. However, their teammates picked them up, lifting the Lady Skippers to a 3-2 win.

With just third singles and second doubles remaining, and Cohasset down two matches to one, the Skipper faithful needed both matches still in play to pull it out as a team. And at that point, both courts showed losing scores for the Cohasset players.

At third singles, junior Holly Graham battled to take the first set 6-4, but found herself down 5-6 in the second with the match on the line. She came back to force a tiebreaker against senior Paige Journey, which Graham eventually won 9-7.

Journey had crisper shots, and many more winners than Graham, but it was Graham's uncanny ability to run down virtually untouchable corner shots and hit clutch lobs at just the right time that led to her win.

With the team score knotted at two, the large spectatorship shifted to surround the second doubles match. Cohasset's Corey Evans and Emilie Sullivan and Manchester-Essex's Alexandra DeSherbinin and Jordan Evans had split the first two sets by symmetrical scores of 6-4. M-E was up 4-3 in the clinching set when Graham sealed her victory.

And although Cohasset broke Jordan Evans' serve to even the set at four, M-E came back to break Corey Evans for a 5-4 advantage, serving for the match and a shot at the state title.

The crowd, stunned on the M-E side and elated on Cohasset's, witnessed the pair of Sullivan and Evans rattle off three consecutive games for a 7-5 win, making the Lady Skippers the 2003 EMass Champs and, at the very least, the 2003 State Runners-up.

"This was a very tight match, but the decorum on both sides was great," observed Meehan, coaching in her 12th season of girls tennis with Cohasset. The crowd appeared to be about 70%-30% in favor of Cohasset.

Throughout the playoffs, Cohasset has had an excellent fan base, helped obviously by three consecutive home matches and a neutral site match (against Bourne in the Sectional Finals) being held in neighboring Hingham. Still, a high number of parents, CHS students and friends made the trip out for the match.

In the match Friday, the Lady Skippers needed just 50 minutes to dispatch the Canalwomen of Bourne, a team that entered the Hingham courts with a perfect 19-0 record and the number one seed in the south.

Before some matches had even began their second sets, Evans and Sullivan had finished their second doubles match cleanly with a 6-3, 6-0 decision. Quickly thereafter, Grossman (6-1, 6-1) and Graham (6-3, 6-0) cruised to straight set victories.

With the match officially decided, and the pressure off, Shea and Caron put away their opponents with a 6-3, 6-3 decision.

Stone found herself locked into a match with senior Sasha Soloman, a heavy-hitter with a devastating backhand down the line. Soloman, who is ranked top 20 in New England, changed her normally heavy-handed tactics against the monster-hitting Stone, changing pace and looking for openings. Her patience was rewarded with a 6-3, 6-2 win over Stone, the sophomore's first dual meet loss in her two years of varsity.

The Lady Skippers will take on Tantasqua this afternoon (3:30 p.m., Clark University in Worcester) for the Div. II State Championship.

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse closing out the season

U15 Blue v Hingham

For only the second time this season the U15 Blue team lost, dropping a very tight battle to Hingham 7-6.

After a long layoff Cohasset started slowly and was out-hustled for most of the first half but managed to stay even with Hingham at 3-3. The second half started with more of the same as Hingham jumped out to a 5-3 lead before Cohasset woke up and started to match the intensity level of their opponent. Cohasset clearly outplayed Hingham in the fourth quarter but could only get to within one goal as they missed several scoring opportunities by shooting wide of the cage.

Jared Dick filled in admirably for regular goalie Wes Ulmer and made five saves on the day with two of them coming at key moments at the end of the game. Robert Sylvia, Bobby Meikleham and Jake Cuneo all had strong games at close defense. Jared Kinch was excellent on offense and defense from his midfield position notching a goal and an assist and coming up with several ground balls and turnovers. Peter Oswald had two assists on the game with one coming at his usual attack position and the second on a great steal and feed as he finished the game at midfield. Both Corey Chase and Alex Shipp had two goals on the day with Ryan Kucinski picking up a single tally. Adam Smith notched an assist.

U15 White v Hingham

With a lackluster performance on the part of our hometown boys, the U15 White team lost their bid to stay undefeated in their final regular season game against a much stronger and more committed Hingham group. While the score was surprisingly close through the first half at a 4 - 2 closing mark, with Dan Trendowicz and Mike Bunstein finding the net, this one was never really a contest.

Keeping the score in sight was some tough goaltending by Nathan Porter and some one-man defensive prowess by Jeff Brown and Conor Holway (not to mention 5 pipe bangers that could have easily been goals for Hingham). More of the same followed in the second half as Hingham began to find their stride and appeared to be able to shoot (and score) at will, registering 3 more unanswered goals with cannon shots from the outside that found their mark. With the score 7 - 2 entering the final quarter, our boys did mount an initial surge on tallies from Mike Grimm and Trendowicz early on in the 4th, but the Cohasset team was just out of gas and spirit at the end and the Hingham squad proved too much for our depleted roster as they added 2 more of their own for what ended up being a disappointing loss 9-4.

U13 White v. Braintree

The Cohasset/White squad hosted Braintree last Thursday night, under damp and cool skies, the squad played its most complete game of the season as it bested a talented Braintree team 7-5. Cohasset came to play from the get go, as it jumped on Braintree early and continued on to a 3-0 lead after the 1st quarter. Attackmen Mike Froio, Austin Meyers and Jonny Wade led the way with the scoring, with Gordon Smith assisting on Froio's score and Chris Walsh assisting on Wade's goal. Ian Quinlan made a number of fine saves, including working through a tough shot on his left leg. Braintree jumped back into the game in the second quarter, scoring three times.

The Braintree goaltender, who was outstanding all night, made a number of point blank saves to keep Cohasset at bay. Ian Porter netted Cohasset's only second period score, and the teams went into the half with Cohasset holding a 4-3 advantage. The third quarter was a fine display of lacrosse by both teams, with plenty of back and forth action. Cohasset's scores were on the sticks of John Kearney and Jonny Wade, with an assist going to Brendan Doonan on Wade's goal. Braintree scored two of their own and the quarter ended with Cohasset up 6-5. Cohasset's defense shined in the fourth quarter as it held Braintree from scoring. Goaltender Chris Brown had a number of fine stops, and Cohasset's defense stepped it up a couple of notches.

Particular mention goes to Keegan Flynn, Taylor McQuade and Andersen Lynner.

Brendan Doonan netted Cohasset's final score of the night on a feed from Phillip Schlawinsky.

U 13 White v. Hingham

The Cohasset squad traveled to Hingham this past Sunday to play on of its perennial rivals. The game turned out as billed with both teams displayed some fine lacrosse play. The hard work of the boys throughout the Spring was evident. Hingham notched the first score of the day, but Cohasset responded nicely with Will Evans finding the back of the net on a feed from Geoff Evans. Andy McKenna added Cohasset's second goal and the 1st quarter ended with Cohasset up 2-1.

The second quarter was full of great action and both teams had a number of scoring chances. Hingham found the net four times in the quarter and Cohasset responded with a goal from Jonny Wade. Hingham went into halftime leading 5-3.

The third quarter saw plenty of back and forth action. Cohasset scored on three nicely assisted goals. Ian Porter netted the first on a feed from Owen Landon. Tom Buckley scored with an assist to Andrew Bell, and John Kearney added Cohasset's third of the quarter on an assist from Tom Buckley. Hingham added three of its own and led at the end of the quarter 8-6. The fourth quarter saw Cohasset rise to the occasion and battle back. The boys in blue were determined as they played spirited, team lacrosse. Chris Walsh got Cohasset within one on a feed from Geoff Evans. With about three minutes to play Andrew Bell tied the game up. The final minutes saw some great action with Hingham finding the back of the net with about a minute to go and was able to hold Cohasset at bay and ended up on top 9-8.

U11 White v Norwell

On Thursday night the Cohasset u11 white team put in a strong performance and beat Norwell 11-6. The team had balance scoring and played good defense as they showed their improved passing skills off. Terance Durkin led the way with 2 goals and a nice assist to Brendan Walsh . Kyle Healy started the scoring for Cohasset and played a strong second half in goal turning away 7 shots. Max MacCleave was in goal the first half and at attack in the 2nd he got a goal and an assist. Single goals were scored by Thomas Flibotte, Willie Brown, Sam Richardson, Pat Kearney, John Collins and Nate Brown (assisted by Derek Froio). Good play was also put in by Defenseman Jamie Faber and Coleman Hernon and Dan Barnes and Christian Allard.

Cohasset 5-2 at the half and 8-4 after 3 periods in the hard fought game.

U11 Blue v Hingham

A great all around team effort led by a stingy defense and a dominating ground ball performance propelled Cohasset U11 Blue to a 10 to 5 victory over Hingham. Jack Carrier and Jack Nelson provided a spark to the team with tenacious defense and Charlie Coffman and Mark Dick were instrumental in maintaining ball control. Cohasset scoring was led by Andrew Whitney, Derek Youngman, Kyle Livingstone, Sam Leahy, Robbie Mahoney and Alex Evans.

U11 White v Hingham

The White's winning ways continued with their strong finish to the year by beating the Hingham red team 9-3. It was the white's 3rd win in their last 4 games. After falling behind 1-0, Cohasset started finding the net with goals by Sam Richardson and Thomas Flibotte. Patrick Cantillon then scored 2 goals in a few minutes to give Cohasset the lead for good 4-2. Willy Brown was outstanding in goal the first half. The second half started with Patrick Kearney making a 60 yard 3 dodge moved to make it 5-2.

Great goals by John Collins (assist by Kearney) and Christian Allard left the score 7-2 at the end of 3 periods. Terrance Durkin capped a terrific season off with a hard shot that found the upper part of the gage and Nate Brown finished off the scoring right before the final whistle. Flibotte played goal in the second half and came up with many great saves.

Other notable performances on offense and defense were Derek Froio, Jamie Faber, Andrew Burnett, Dan Barnes and Jake Durkin.

U11 Gray v Sandwich

The U11 Gray finished the season with a hard fought 13-5 loss to host Sandwich. The Sandwich team came out hitting and it took the Cohasset squad some time to adjust to the aggressive style of play. Brennan Bukowski played a strong first half in goal making several big saves, while facing multiple shots. The defense led by Nick Routhier, Alex Kinnealy and Chase Baldwin played tough against a quick Sandwich team. The offense in the first half was led by great individual efforts from the McNary brothers, Mitch and Dean, each scoring once. Pat McCormack finished out the first half scoring for Cohasset, with a nice goal on an assist from Mitch McNary. Drew Cobin, Alex Everett and Jeff Durkin played solid halfs at midfield while Chris Carpenter, Ben Curley and Gus Helboch chipped in some excellent play at attack. The second half mirrored the first in terms of scoring, however the Cohasset squad did a great job of adjusting to the physical play. Kyle Healy led the charge in goal and had a number of excellent saves against another barrage of shots. Brennan Bukowski came out of goal to lead a very spirited second half defense along with Chris Brash, that played very well despite the score. The offense had many great opportunities in the second half but were unable to capitalize on many of them. The McNarys again accounted for two goals in the second half, in addition to another strong showing at attack by Geoff Swain.

any consistency. Kahn led Cohasset scorers with four goals, and finished his career with 227 points – only the second player in school history to score over 200 varsity points. He also finished as the Skippers' scoring leader for 2003, with 52 goals and 32 assists – the second year he's led the team in scoring and the second time he's had more than 50 goals.

Soph Jake Previte, the team's number two scorer, had the other two goals and completed his breakout year with a remarkable 46 tallies. Robert Hickey had a pair of assists to finish the scoring.

Kahn started the scoring 3:28 into the game, assisted by classmate Hickey. But the Skippers picked up back-to-back penalties, and Ipswich responded with man-up goals from Sterling Folkstead and Matt Lemire for a 2-1 lead midway through the first period.

The Skippers controlled the ball for most of the last three minutes of the period, but Kahn missed from close range. Then Ipswich goalie Sean McCarthy cleared to attackman Andy Mackey (four goals, one assist), and he beat junior goalie Nick Murphy just before time expired for a 3-1 lead.

Orcutt replaced attackers Mark Davis and Tom Anderson with Jake Previte and Mike Rasmussen to begin the second period, but to no avail. The Skippers, for the first time all season, would be outscored in every quarter. Particularly heartbreaking were the first few seconds of both the third and fourth periods, when Tiger attackman Evan Heyman picked up three backbreaking goals, with the last two pushing the score to 10-4. Kahn got two back on heroic drives to the cage, but that would be as close as Cohasset would get.

Murphy finished the game with 13 saves, but had only four in the second half.

"Unfortunately, we didn't play our best," said Orcutt. "It's hard to say why, because we practiced hard this week. Losing Matt Davis in the Hingham game, in retrospect, was something that we never fully recovered from, and I wish we could have kept the season going to give him one more chance to step on the field."

Cohasset, despite the loss of its seniors, should be able to put a talented and experienced team on the field in 2004.

Besides Jake Previte, the Skippers will return a nucleus of defensemen Mike Devine, Conor Buick, Steve Davis, Dan Roth and Casey Coleman, goalies Nick Murphy, Chris Simms and Ben Libby, middies Mark Davis, Joe Durkin, Dewayne Morris, Mike Hajjar, Ryan Tufts, Jon Grimm, Sam Steele and Trevor Brady, and attackmen Mike Rasmussen and Aidan Buick.

Other reinforcements are expected from both the successful junior varsity and middle school squads.

The team will regroup one last time on June 17 at the annual lacrosse break-up dinner to be held at Atlantica.

And the seniors will get another chance to suit up on Sunday, June 15 at the third annual Alumni Game that supports the Bourke Corcoran Scholarship Foundation.

Cohasset 18, Tri-County 2

The Cohasset boys made their 2003 tournament debut a happy one, jumping to a 9-0 first quarter lead and going on to beat Tri-County, the Mass. Technical League champs, 18-2.

Tri-County, with a 15-6 record, came into the tournament as the eighth seed and beat Minuteman 16-4 in the opening round. But the vo-tech squad was no match for the Skippers as senior Curt Kahn threw in three goals in the first five minutes of play. The Tri-County coaches called a time-out after the first seven minutes, but couldn't stem the tide.

Cohasset led 14-0 at the half, and emptied its bench in the third quarter.

The defense— led by seniors Nick Spirito, Ben Lynner and Evan Pestone— stifled their opponent, allowing only six shots on goal the entire game. Three Skipper goalies saw action, with starter Nick Murphy collecting one save in the first half, and soph Chris Simms picking up another in the third period while giving up both goals. Freshman Ben Libby took over in the fourth, and made a pair of saves.

Cohasset senior Jared Krupczak (second runner from right) crosses the finish line for the final time in his sensational high school track career. Jared posted the eighth fastest time in the 200-meter preliminaries at Saturday's All-State meet, but then opted to attend his graduation rather than run in the finals and attempt to qualify for the New England Track Championships.

Finishing with a flourish

spot in the preliminaries, Krupczak had 10 minutes to decide whether he'd attend graduation or stick around for the finals.

"If I hadn't qualified, I'd have said 'well, I gave it my best shot'," and that would have been the end of it," said Krupczak. "But having to make that decision was just so hard. It stinks that a high school athlete would have to make that choice.

"Going to New England's would have been a dream come true, but graduation is a huge event in your life too. To be honest, I think it stinks that we couldn't move graduation. I think they would have done it for other sports. We had arranged to have it moved in plenty of time, but then parents complained and they moved it back to Saturday."

Because of the hamstring injury, Krupczak had been unable to train much the last few weeks, and his conditioning was far below optimum—something that showed up in the last 50-meters in Saturday's prelim. Jared was second to B-R's Clint Cooper in the second heat, but faded down the stretch, finishing fourth.

"I just didn't have anything left, but I put everything I had into those last 50-meters, and managed to get that final spot; that was huge," said Krupczak, who will run track next year at Bridgewater State, where he intends to major in education, with an eye toward a career in teaching and coaching.

Krupczak was also pleased to finish ahead of Carver freshman Mike Grant, who he finished behind to at last weekend's Class D meet after beating him twice during the regular season.

"I guess that means I go out as the top 200-meter runner in the South Shore League," said Krupczak. "That means a lot to me too."

Kidder was able to compete in the morning javelin throw. Unfortunately, his throw of 154-09 was well off his qualifying throw of 163-07, and the results was an 18th place finish in his final high school athletic event.

"It just wasn't Ian's best day for throwing," said LaFountain. "The air was kind of thick, and it was just one of those things."

The CHS team of 18 has lost three athletes to the caps and gowns, with female standout La'Raine Langford having joined Krupczak and Kidder on the Music Circus stage for graduation on Saturday.

Coach LaFountain plans to actively recruit—and, in some cases, re-recruit—athletes to his spring program. This is a cause, though, that is clearly hindered by the fact CHS, unlike all of the other school's in the South Shore League, has one season of track/cross country.

The veteran coach has tried to start a "winter track club" in the past, but that idea has been shot down, school administrators feeling this could prove too big a drain on the winter sports programs (basketball, hockey, wrestling, gymnastics). With CHS having only 300 students grades 9-12, making it by far the smallest school in the SSL, it's tough to argue with that logic.

LaFountain would like to see a summer track program of some sort take shape in Cohasset, but noted that nothing has taken shape on that front either.

Considering his miniscule roster, coach LaFountain was positively ecstatic with this season's success.

"Not bad for 10 guys and eight girls," said the coach. "The boys took 12th overall at the Class meet, and the girls were 13th, their first top 15 finish in my time here.

"And this was a great group. There was no maintenance. The athletes I had this year wanted to be there. It was a great season."

Lady Skippers steer successful maiden voyage

Softball team will look to continue steady improvement in year two

By Jim Logan
CORRESPONDENT

After a seven-year hiatus, the Cohasset Lady Skippers returned to the South Shore League's varsity softball fields in 2003.

"It was great (for the program) to be back playing varsity softball," said head coach Deb Bostwick. Coming in, Bostwick wasn't looking for, or expecting, a miracle season from her young and learning club. What the Skippers' skipper was hoping to see was a team that might bring a spark to a long-dormant flame in Cohasset athletics.

CHS baseball wrap-up in next week's Mariner

Coach Bostwick feels like her girls did just that.

"I think the girls did a terrific job this year," she asserted of the season that yielded a 4-14 record. "It might not show in terms of the wins and losses we had, but when you look at the things we were able to accomplish and the positive attitude on this team, I call what we did a success."

Beginning with the leadership of senior captain Heather Peraino and working itself right down the line— to the likes of freshmen up-and-comers like Melissa Crowley-Buck and Katie James— the Lady Skippers displayed a key ingredient that's paramount to any winning squad: team unity and morale.

As far as achievements on the field in 2003 and what to expect in 2004, Bostwick felt she saw a nice nucleus of Cohasset players developing throughout this spring and believes the club should progress even further when it comes time to lace 'em up next year. Among those bright spots was a no-no pitched by James against South Shore Christian Academy, as well as an out-of-park grand slam, 8 RBI performance by Danielle Pinkus versus that same Christian Academy club later in the season.

"I got to see some girls do some good things this season," Bostwick said.

Among the names to watch, along with soon-to-be sophomores Crowley-Buck and James and upcoming senior Pinkus, the Skippers will be keeping a close eye on people like upperclassmen Caitlin Condon, Rachel Doyle, Caitlin Gontarz and Andrea Keating, in addition to younger cognomens such as Casey Anderson, Cecelia Chapman, Elizabeth Condos and Molly Liddell, as well as Jennifer Dinger, Erin Liddell and Emily Nash—all of whom will hopefully help in Cohasset's rebuilding process.

Though she feels the future once more looks bright for Cohasset softball, Coach Bostwick at the same time isn't delusional regarding the amount of work that lies ahead for the program, or the amount of time it's going to take before the Lady Skippers are successful again from a standings standpoint.

"We know we've got a lot of work ahead of us," Bostwick said. "But, overall, I think it's looking good for our program. We've had a lot of great support [from parents and school members].

"I'm really looking forward to next year, and seeing what the girls can do with a year of varsity experience under their belts."

from their child." Malvey went on to share his personal account of a young man named Stephen, who had always been extremely active, and was stricken with cancer at the age of 28.

The extraordinary young man had been friends with the Malvey family for years, and had aspirations of making the National Ski Team. Malvey described the young skier as having "knees like a piston" while encountering moguls on the course. With his sickness came the need for chemotherapy treatments, forcing him off the slopes, yet he always remained in good spirits, living life each day after the next.

In time, came the need for two bone marrow transplant surgeries, the second, and fairly recent, being successful, allowing him to be the best man at his brother's wedding this summer. "This is not meant to frighten you," he said, but rather to give graduates the message that "you need to have heroes and be heroes."

While visiting Stephen in the hospital, who at the time was very sick with a grim prognosis, he was asked how he kept in such high spirits, to which he looked up and around the room and replied, "these are the people that love me." Bringing tears to many eyes in the audience, Malvey asked graduates to take a look around the tent, take a look at parties to be held that afternoon, and recognize, "these are the people who love you."

Looking out on the faces of the graduates he asked, "Will you become heroes? Will you achieve your goals? Will you make a difference in your own lives as well as the lives of others? I believe you will."

Class President Curt Kahn wished fellow classmates continued success, remembering all the lessons they have taught each other over the years. His hope for each member of the graduating class, is that they will have as supportive a community in their future endeavors as they have had in Cohasset. "What we have shared, we will never forget and we will continue to grow from it," he said.

Salutatorian, Ross Lieb-Lappen noted the importance of family in helping the class achieve their goals. "Our parents brought us to this place. They are the heroes Dr. Malvey speaks of," he said.

Very proud of the class he is a part of, Lieb-Lappen said he had heard many teachers say his was "their favorite grade." "Some teachers say it to every grade, but I think we deserve it," he said.

Valedictorian, Elizabeth Reynolds spoke about the impact change has had on the graduating class, through not only the many new teachers filling spaces after others retired, but the change of the building as well. Not only have they learned the standard academics, "they also learned how to build a state of the art gymnasium," she said. Living through the transformation, she believes the graduating class will have an advantage as they have become accustomed to embracing change.

As the students prepared to receive their diplomas, four retiring teachers Maureen Alcott, Jo-Ellen Wood, Paul Narkiewicz, and Thomas O'Neil were given honorary diplomas and a gift, as a thank you to their many years of service in the Cohasset school system.

As the students walked across the stage one by one, a very special moment presented itself when School Committee member Jane Pescatore rose to present her son with his diploma. Returning to her seat, she, like so many mothers that day, welled up with tears.

"This is your day," said Principal Michael Jones, who has come to know the class well over the years. "You will always remain in my heart and my memory." And as the members of the Class of 2003 were presented, all 77 students in unison, moved their tassels to the right.

Some things old, some things new

Post 118 Legion squad Legion team hopes it has right blend of vets, rooks

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Regardless of sport, it seems the vast majority of teams are constantly trying to come up with the right blend of new and old, potential and experience.

Well, the Cohasset Post 118 Legion squad has split it right down the middle. Veteran coach Scott Arnold returns nine veterans and welcomes nine newcomers to his 10th team.

The nine veterans were all key players on last year's team, so one could say that he's returning his starting lineup intact. Though it does take a bit of truth stretching to say that, it is clear that Arnold has a nice situation: he can let his proven players carry the load while bringing along his newcomers slowly.

"I've got guys right now who are ready to step in and hit the ground running, and then a lot of guys who really look like they can help us down the road, some now, some probably later," said Arnold. "In some ways, it makes my job pretty easy."

All nine of the newcomers are high school underclassmen: eight current sophomores and one freshman. Two of the veterans are also wrapping up their sophomore years, making this an extremely young team, relatively speaking.

"Yeah, a year or two or three from now these guys could really be tearing it up in this league if they stick to it and keep developing," proclaimed Arnold.

At the other end of the spectrum, there are five young men who graduated from high school last spring: SHS grads Mike Barry, Brian Woods, Alex Knight and Mike Gulinello, and B.C. High alum Chris Carr.

Rounding out the roster are Thayer senior Brian Signorelli and B.C. High senior Eric Dmohowski.

Barry, coming off a spring season of pitching at Northfield Mount Herman Prep School, has emerged as the team's number one pitcher, and is throwing "very well," according to coach Arnold.

Dmohowski is currently listed as the number two starter, while Carr and Straughn provide two more proven arms. Malley has opened some eyes from the mound in the early going, as has Stella, a lefty with cerebral palsy who has limited use of his right arm.

"I was a little nervous with Brandon at first, but he's done everything I've asked and then some," said Arnold "It looks like he handles himself well on the mound, and he's been impressive throwing the ball. I'm happy to have him on the team."

O'Leary, Pilczak and Woods are also listed as pitchers on the team roster.

The infield appears rock solid with three of four starters back in Barry, Knight and Gulinello. When not pitching, Barry will likely see a good deal of time at first base. Knight, who prepped this year at the Bridgeton School in Maine with the hopes of improving his college soccer prospects, is back for his third year of starting at second base, and Gulinello, last year's vacuum cleaner at third base, moves a few feet to the right to play shortstop.

Kevin Signorelli is penciled in at third base for now, though Barba, Reilly, Rennie and Straughn will also likely see some infield time.

"I like my infield a lot," said Arnold. "The guys I have out there will make the plays. I'm not worried about that."

The elder Signorelli, Brian, will likely see most of the time behind the plate. The recent grad was named Thayer Academy's Most Valuable Player this season, as he batted .450 and played a big part in the Tigers 12-3 regular season. He is headed to Vanderbilt in the fall, and plans to try to make that school's Div. 1 baseball team as a walk-on.

Terence O'Brien, last year's starter behind the plate, will likely see some time at catcher as well as DH.

The outfield positions appear wide open, with Dmohowski, Carr, O'Leary, Reilly and Straughn all in the mix.

Missing from last year's team that made it to the second round of the state playoffs, where it was ousted by eventual New England champion Sandwich, are the top four hitters in the order: Greg Levin, Jason Connelly and Jesse Cole, all 2002 Scituate High grads, and CHS grad Tim Straughn.

Levin, the team's starting centerfielder who now attends Bowdoin University, was one day too old to play Legion ball this year. Straughn, now at UMass-Amherst, was also too old.

Cole, on full baseball scholarship at Wofford University, and Connelly, on partial baseball scholarship at Western New England, are both playing in extremely competitive summer baseball leagues which were recommended by their coaches.

Cole and Connelly were also the team's top two pitchers last season, with Connelly the team's top shortstop and Cole moving around the infield in order to keep his bat in the lineup. The third member of last year's starting rotation, Tom Fitzgerald, is now pitching for Babson College and also playing in a recommended summer league.

"I think I've got a team that's going to hit the ball well, defend well, and I think the pitching is going to surprise some people," concluded Arnold. "I think we should do well in our zone. A few teams were hurt by graduation, and I don't think there are any real powerhouses out there."

Legion Notes

Unfortunately, the Post 118ers dropped the first two games of the season, falling to Zone 6 rivals Milton on Sunday, 9-0, and defending champion Braintree on Monday, 6-3.

Barry pitched relatively well in the opener against the team Arnold proclaims to be "the class of our zone." He went five innings, with Malley coming in for one impressive inning of mop up duty.

In the 6-3 loss to perennial powerhouse Braintree, played on Milliken Field in Cohasset, the Post 118ers countered a three run uprising in the second by the visitors with a three spot of their own in the home half of that frame.

The hosts loaded the bases on a single by Brian Signorelli and walks drawn by Straughn and Barry. Singles by O'Leary, Pilczak and, finally, Kevin Signorelli tied the game at 3-3.

Both pitchers settled down from there, Dmohowski for Cohasset, and the game remained tied at three through five innings. Dmohowski went the distance, mixing a good breaking ball with pinpoint control. He struck out six and scattered five hits, one walk and two hit batsmen.

Unfortunately, Dmohowski was dealt a cruel blow when a pair of errors in the sixth ushered home three unearned runs to bring the game to its final score.

Cohasset threatened in the bottom of the seventh, loading the bases with two outs on hits by Gulinello and Straughn and a walk drawn by pinch-hitter Woods on a great at bat. Woods fouled off a couple of 3-2 pitches before finally earning first base on the eighth pitch of the at bat.

With the tying run on base, however, the next batter struck out to end the game, and drop Cohasset to 0-2.

Coach Arnold was anything but despondent, however.

"It'll come together," he declared confidently. "Milton was just a very good team and a tough one to open the season with, but Braintree is one we could have won with a break here or there. Dmohowski pitched great, and our guys were hitting the ball pretty well. Unfortunately, a lot of those well hit balls went right at Braintree players."

Don't bet against 'em

team that had been devastated by graduations was allowed to utilize the services of four seventh graders to help round out the starting line-up. Perhaps Cohasset will be given the same opportunity.

And, of course, the team will hopefully have back the varsity starters from this year. Junior Andrew Wise showed tremendous improvement in his steady game this year, adding a forehand winner and a superb lobbing ability to his numerous other tennis skills.

Freshman Nils Sceery was a major force on the team in his first year, playing at every position except first singles. Ironically, first singles may be the position he is thrust into as a sophomore, but with some of the top players in the SSL graduating, Sceery could very well have a solid year.

Freshman Chris Pescatore, a late addition to the roster, joined up just after the team had played its first dual match. Pescatore turned out to be a valuable asset at second doubles, and hopefully his game will continue to improve the way it did this year.

The team says good-bye to SSL all-stars Ross Lieb-Lappen, Scott Faber and a correspondent who wishes the team luck not only in figuring out how to get a full team onto the court, but how to maintain the odd tradition of making the playoffs after the team's season had nearly been written off as a year of, like the school itself, reconstruction.

LIBRARY CORNER

Artist of the month

"For the Young of Heart," Don Larkin's show of monoprints is now on display at the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library through June 30. The show, which features playful artwork, is meant to reach both children and adults.

Larkin's education began at the Massachusetts College of art and was completed with graduate work at Cranbrook Academy of Art. Now retired after 32 years of teaching at Weymouth North High School, he has returned to creating playful images of birds and fish.

He was inspired to create this show by the completion of the new library and a print created for his granddaughter, Vie. The library has a beautiful new children's room across from the gallery. This wonderful gallery space reaches out to greet children as they enter the library. These two spaces created an opportunity to display artwork that both adults and children will enjoy.

Larkin creates most of his prints at the monoprint studio at the South Shore art Center with Esther Maschio. He also works on smaller prints at his home studio. His last show was at the prestigious Drawing Room Gallery in Manila, The Philippines.

Beekeepers share their stories of sweet success

By Matthew J. Gill
MGILL@CNC.COM

Many of us consider them a summertime nuisance, buzzing their way into picnics and barbecues stirring up a flurry of swatting and panic among outdoor enthusiasts. While we fear the bee's sting, we love the sweet nectar they produce — the fruit of their labors — honey.

Scituate residents John Proctor, Myron Boluch, Jed Fitzgerald and Al Needham have a keen interest in both bees and the honey they make. The four are among a handful of beekeepers or apiarists on the South Shore who bring the honey from the hive to local tables.

Beekeeper John Proctor checks the status of his hives.

A honey of a hobby

A retired carpenter and woodworker, Proctor got his start in beekeeping back in 1956. After a number of years, he handed the honey-yielding hobby off to his son, Robert, but in 1990 he got back into the business, when his son discovered he was allergic to bees.

Few are willing to get close enough to bees to find out how they do what they do, but Proctor is happy to explain the natural and miraculous feat accomplished by the bees.

When bees harvest the nectar of a flower or fruit bloom, the nectar is about 90 percent water. They then bring it back into the hive, and reduce its moisture content by continually fanning their wings. When most of the moisture has been drawn out, and reduced to about 17 percent, the bees use beeswax to cap the nectar inside honeycombs.

With the moisture content low, and the honey capped, bacteria can't live in the honey, and beekeepers know the product is ready for human consumption.

Proctor said extracting the honey from the hives, requires both finesse and good-timing.

He first removes the honeycombs from the buzzing hives' top drawers — leaving the bottom drawers for the brood — the site where the bees are hatched and raised. Then he shakes off the bees still clinging to their work, and brings them home. From there, the beeswax is shaved off the combs by either a hot knife, or a shaving machine. At this point, the combs are placed in a spinning extractor, which employs centrifugal force to drain, and then filter the honey into bottles, barrels, and jars, waiting below.

Protective clothing including a veil and gloves helps take the sting out of the job, but Proctor said its a rare "occupational hazard," noting he gets stung only about five or six times a year. Despite that, Proctor maintains a good relationship with the force behind the honey.

"Generally speaking, they're pretty gentle," he said. "I do like having them around."

Proctor keeps four hives in spots throughout Scituate, and for 10 consecutive years, he has won an award in either the Marshfield Fair or Topsfield Fair for his honey.

During the summer — the main honey season runs from July to late August — Proctor said a typical hive can house up to 85,000 bees, but as he later qualified, determining that exact number can prove problematic. "It's kind of hard to count them," he said.

Last year, Proctor's four hives produced 328 pounds of honey, and from his house on Merritt Lane, he sells the honey in one and two-pound jars.

"It's a good hobby," he said. "You don't get rich at it, but it pays for itself."

Pollination

While some beekeepers focus mainly on the honey harvest, others bring their bees on location to pollinate various fields, orchards and farms. Jed Fitzgerald said a common pollination schedule consists of visits to the. cranberry bogs in southeastern Massachusetts, the blueberry fields of Maine, an autumn journey to New York state to increase the flow of both goldenrod and wild aster, and finally a winter's journey to the citrus groves of Florida.

For both the bees and their keepers, it's a busy schedule, and the cycle starts up again with a return trip north in May.

"When bees pollinate, they carry the pollen on their feet," said Fitzgerald. "They bring pollen from flower to flower, which brings a higher rate of pollination."

Fitzgerald said increased pollination naturally means more flowers and more fruit

"Honey bees, because they multiply so fast, provide a great service all over the country," he said. "Without honey bees, crop production [around the world] would be off one half to one third."

Winter woes

With the heavy snows, and harsh cold, this past winter was a difficult one for local bee-keepers, and even worse for their bees. The problems were exacerbated by an invasion of microscopic mites, which caused lots of damage, and even killed off entire hives.

During the winter Proctor lost one of his hives to the elements, and in order to replace it this spring, he ordered a $50 package of bees from a company in Georgia. Weighing in at three pounds, and arriving via the UPS truck, the package contained approximately 12,000 bees.

For the health of it

Tucked away behind Myron Boluch's Country Way home — behind the rope swing, the cobblestone driveway, and the blueberry bush — are five bee hives, buzzing with activity.

As a son of Ukrainian immigrants, whom Boluch said are known for their bee-keeping, the trade comes naturally to him. His hives, on the other hand, did not.

After retiring from the Naval Reserve, Boluch worked as a Maritime lawyer — dealing with only sea-based cases, Boluch often worked on cases at pro-bono rate. Boluch said one of his clients, who couldn't afford to pay him in cash, offered him the only thing he could: his bees.

Twenty years later, Boluch has stretched that payment into one of his favorite hobbies. But if you're not a Boluch family member, sampling the his honey is no easy task. While he use to sell it locally, Boluch said when honey season rolls around, his phone begins to ring with relations on both sides looking for "Uncle Myron's honey." Boluch admitted that his relatives aren't the only ones to blame for his current honey shortage, for whatever the relatives leave behind, Boluch said he eats himself.

He is quick to point out the medicinal values of both bees and the honey they produce.

"If you eat local honey, supposedly, it helps people who have local allergies," he said, noting

Strolling along the rue, your eye is drawn to a half open window dressed in lace. The room glows in the warmth of old copper; a well-patinated sideboard compliments the dramatic linens and rustic pottery placed throughout.

You'll find that same sense of style and unique spirit of France in one fabulous shop . . . Voilà!

that the honey produced by the bees contains tiny amounts of pollen which can help build up a person's immunity to certain allergies. Even the bees' sting has been beneficial said Boluch, who maintains that while both his parents suffered from severe arthritis, a quarter-century's worth of bee stings have helped him remain, arthritis-free at age 81.

The tiny amount of venom in a bee-sting, he says, is actually good for you, and is the impetus behind B.V.T., or bee-venom therapy, a medicinal practice that utilizes bee venom to cure various ailments.

Still, Boluch keeps an epinephrine shot at the ready in case someone allergic to bees gets stung.

Swarms

Al Needham no longer keeps bees behind his flower-filled home on Edgar Road, but stays active in the bee-keeping community by maintaining an apiarian Web site.

"The object is to educate people about honey bees," he said.

On the site, people commonly write in with their questions about bees, and Needham says one of the most common queries he receives, regards bee swarms.

"Swarms scare the hell out of people," he said, but even though the swirling swarm can sound as loud as a truck when it passes, Needham assured its not as dangerous as it looks.

Away from their hives the bees are not territorial and not likely to sting, but are mainly concerned with finding a new home and protecting the queen.

Needham said that bees swarm for two reasons. Either the hive is too crowded, or the hive has begun to subdivide or "split" itself into two groups, with one group having to look for a new residence.

Before leaving the hive, the bees do not go hungry or unprepared.

"The [bees]gorge themselves with honey," said Needham. "Then the queen makes a new queen cell, and then she leaves," — taking half of the hive with her.

According to Fitzgerald, the queen has a very loyal and devoted following in her bees.

"They will follow that queen to the ends of the earth," he said.

While the swarm is on location — either in a tree, a bush, or someone's attic — searcher bees are on the prowl looking for a proper place to take up a more permanent residence. When an appropriate domain is found, Needham said the searchers return to the swarm, do a little dance, and the group is on its way to a new home.

When the new home is found, Fitzgerald said the bees quickly acquaint themselves to it, and "they're off and running.

"It's a miracle of nature."

The queen

As it is among the English monarchy, there can only be one queen in each hive, said Proctor. When a hive has sub-divided, the first queen to hatch will kill or destroy the remaining queen cells.

She has an elongated body which is wider, and about twice the length of her Drone, Guard, and Nurse Bee counterparts.

The queen works from home, leaving the hive only once in her lifetime — which Proctor said can be up to six years — when she mates with several drones, for life.

Needham said the relationships are short, for the drones die after fertilizing the queen. "But what a way to go," he said.

Upon returning to the hive, the queen will start laying eggs, and virtually never stops.

At up to 2,000 eggs in a day, Proctor described the queen bees as "egg laying machines."

A taste of honey

A retired high school teacher who taught at both Scituate and Cohasset High School, Fitzgerald got into the bee-keeping business in 1972 — and says he's glad he stuck with it all these years.

After three decades of honeycomb, honey jars, and honey mustard, Jed Fitzgerald has honey, in his blood. Whether its sweetening his coffee or tea, providing a natural addition to his cereal, or just taken straight and sweet as a spoonful a 1/2 hour before running, Fitzgerald consumed honey everyday.

On a vacation trip to China last year, Fitzgerald even journeyed out to the countryside just to see his Asian, apiarian brothers at work.

"Every where we went in the countryside, there where bees," he said. He added that hives were located in the middle of the city too, and even noted a few buzzing bee-hives outside a university classroom.

Running one of the region's most prolific bee-keeping operations, Fitzgerald had hives at The Route 3A Farm, Treeberry Farm, Jacob's Farm, and at The Steverman Farm on Country Way.

"The reason I had them in so many different places, is because there was a different bloom at each place," he said.

By collecting nectar from different flower and fruit-bloom sources, Fitzgerald explained that the different honeys that the bees would produce would each have their own unique taste.

But after being diagnosed with cancer last year, Fitzgerald decided to sell most of his more than 50 hives. But his final year in the business was his most fruitful. Fitzgerald's 2002 honey yield was the best he's ever had. He harvested a ton and a half — or 3,000 pounds of honey, packaged in 3-pound jugs and 12-ounce bear-shaped bottles and even more incredibly, he sold it all..

Fitzgerald currently keeps a few hives the Donovan Conservation field in Norwell, and Cohasset's Holly Hill Farm.

Looking back on his back-breaking, bee-keeping career, Fitzgerald said he has no regrets and credits the hobby for providing him with a natural education. "[Working with the bees] gave me a reverence for nature that I never really had when I was younger," he said.

"Most beekeepers are humble people — because they've learned some deep truths about life, and nature," he said. "Nature has its ways, and all we can do is go along."

Battle ready

Local bands turn out in force to face off

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Due to a most unexpected popular response, this Saturday's "Battle of the Bands" event at Plymouth Memorial Hall has been expanded not once but twice.

The event, which showcases the musical talent of local bands, comprised primarily of teens, was originally set for one show this month in which band contestants would perform a set of two songs for a total of seven minutes. The overwhelming response from local bands looking to take part, forced organizers to revamp the program allowing each band to play just one song lasting a maximum of five minutes.

But that didn't slow interest. Just last week the Plymouth Memorial Hall and "Battle of the Bands" organizers announced the addition of a second "Battle" show to be scheduled July 19. With more than thirty applications accepted from the total area band submissions, and two shows of fifteen bands each now confirmed, some entries are still left over, and there's even talk of a third show possibly slated for later in the summer, according to Steve Dubin and Jen Tomasetti of "Battle of the Bands" publicity — PR Works in Norwell.

"We're thrilled that we've had such an extensive interest from local bands in our first-time event this year," said Tomasetti. "We really didn't know what to expect when we began planning the 'Battle of the Bands' show, and put the call out for area bands who would be interested. Altogether, it's a very positive sign."

While it may be too early, or too presumptuous, to proclaim something akin to "I've seen the future of rock and roll (and it lives this summer in Plymouth)" the full docket of competing high school band hopefuls on the bill indicates a thriving young, local music scene. Saturday's show features bands from not only Plymouth but also Scituate, Marshfield, Duxbury, Carver, and Braintree, covering a range of musical styles from mainstream and alternative rock to heavy metal and a mix of rock and reggae.

Due to overwhelming response from area teen bands, Plymouth-based metal rockers "Bosco's Disturbance" will compete in the second round of "Battle of the Bands" set for July 19.

"The Bad Year," of Braintree will face off against 14 other South Shore Bands in Saturday's "Battle of the Bands" at Plymouth Memorial Hall.

Alterna-rockers Condition Blue are red hot right now. The South Shore based band will play Miracle East in Abington Friday, June 13.

Something old, something new — CONDITION BLUE

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

A little bit old school rock and roll mixed with the more recent alternative sound—that's how members of the fast-rising South Shore Band Condition Blue describe their group.

"Our sound is modeled on that from the old-school, classic rock bands that we like, and from the newer alternative bands of the last ten years who've expanded on that sound and carried it forward. Now we'd like to carry it forward ourselves," said Condition Blue bassist/vocalist Ross Jackson.

The band's influences include Led Zeppelin, Deep Purple, The Who, The Beatles, and Queen, along with the last decade's sonic wave of Nirvana, Alice In Chains, and Stone Temple Pilots. Combined, these groups helped shaped this up-and-coming quartet's stylistically faithful but wholly original sound. An engaging blend of voluminous guitar power and seamless melodic flow.

Much of this blend is in full effect on Condition Blue's new CD, Legends, which since its early spring release has as an independent disc sold in impressive numbers both at the band's New England and New York club dates and on the band's Web site at www.conditionblue.net. Condition Blue has also previously released a four-song EP, Moonlight In Riverdale in 1999 and a 2000 self-titled debut full-length disc, which got the band off to a strong start by including four #1 mp3.com songs.

The band's most recent release Legends has been well received by fans.

"To us, bands like Led Zeppelin, The Who and The Beatles from the old school and Alice In Chains and Stone Temple Pilots from more recently are bands that have really spent long amounts of time writing good songs with a very sophisticated, multi-layered sense of melody," Jackson said. "A lot of bands these days seem to want to just go with the flow of whatever's current or trendy, like the hip-hop influence that so many are dabbling in lately."

"We have nothing against that style, we think some of it is good and some not so good. But our main ideal as a band is to carve our own musical path, based on the old-school guitar rock that we mostly listen to. And hopefully, an updated version of that music will catch on once again, like back in the 1970s, or the early part of the 90s," Jackson said.

Making 'Hollywood Homicide' was a laughing matter

By Ed Symkus
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

You don't want to get on the bad side of Indiana Jones, Han Solo or Jack Ryan. If you asked them a question they didn't like, they'd let you know.

The same goes with Harrison Ford, the actor who played those three tough guys. Test his patience with a question about his personal life, and Ford's eyes narrow, his face flushes and his little gold earring glistens as he shakes his head.

Ford has always been shy about discussing his off-screen life. So when he enters a hotel room to talk about his new cop comedy "Hollywood Homicide" with a small group of journalists, and one reporter ventures onto sacred ground — Calista Flockhart and his love life — Ford just glares at him.

"Come on," he says quietly, not hiding his annoyance. "I never have been comfortable talking about my personal life. And it's a little too late to start now. Thanks for the thought, I'm very happy, and I think we'll let it go at that."

Brave, clueless, or both, the reporter tries again, asking how much of Harrison Ford is public property to his fans and how much should be personal.

Ford has been through this before. There's silence, then a deep breath.

"Celebrity journalism is an obsession with celebrity that is serviced by a large portion of the press," he whispers gruffly. "I think that's very corrosive. I've been in the public eye for over 30 years. My private life is none of anybody's goddamn business."

To break the rising tension, someone asks about the longevity of his career.

"I enjoy the more arch drawing room or romantic comedies that people have seen me in. But I liked 'Liar Liar' and 'Dumb & Dumber' too."
Harrison Ford

"It's happened a day at a time, with a lot of dumb luck," he says, his voice slightly brighter. "There are a lot of people as talented as I was who never got the opportunities, who never had the luck that I've had. I'm well aware of that. But I've worked hard, I think I've made some reasonably good choices, and I've had a clear idea of how the business works, and how to take care of myself."

Ford limits himself to about one film a year these days. And a look at his track record shows that the past few choices might not have been such good ones. The creepy "What Lies Beneath" made its money back, with a small profit, but both the bland "Random Hearts" and the dull "K-19" were big flops. Yet that doesn't appear to bother him. He just goes on to the next project.

In "Hollywood Homicide," he and Josh Hartnett play police partners who are trying to solve a mass murder at a nightclub. That central plot is serious, but the film turns into a comedy about the two cops trying to juggle second jobs — Hartnett's K.C. plays a struggling actor, Ford's Joe sells real estate.

"I try to do a mix of different kinds of genres, different kinds of characters," says Ford. "When this came along, I thought it was a nice contrast to 'K-19.' The comedies I've done in my career have mostly been romantic comedy where I'm more of the straight man. This was a chance to go a little further, I enjoyed that."

At times, he's downright slapstick in his new film, making faces and taking pratfalls. He's not sure if audiences are going to buy into what he's doing here, but neither is he too worried about it.

"I enjoy the more arch drawing room or romantic comedies that people have seen me in," he says. "But I liked 'Liar Liar' and 'Dumb & Dumber' too."

Steak and marinades

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Americans are spoiled when it comes to steaks – think Porterhouse – but most of the rest of the world finds tougher but more flavorful steaks preferable (or at least more affordable). The question was how to prepare and grill tough steaks to make them tender, juicy and delicious.

The first thing that came to mind was steak tips, an inexpensive cut of meat from the sirloin section of the animal. The meat is marinated and then grilled and the result can be impressive, although the average order of steak tips at a mall restaurant is on par with the "filet mignon" that used to be served in coach when flying cross-country. It all depends on how hungry you are. So I started with a taste test of various cuts of meat including flank steak (tough, dry, and a little gamey), London broil (although not a real "cut," it is most often dry and tough, top round (tough and meaty tasting), and sirloin tip strips. The sirloin tip strips were the winners and are cut from the "sirloin" section of the animal, which is the hip area, the best being the "flap" muscle from the bottom sirloin. They cost about $5 per pound. The "strips" are pieces 6 or 7 inches long and a half to an inch and a half wide. A sirloin tip steak is harder to find and is also wider on one end than the other. Either can be used in this recipe. Just don't purchase the small pieces of meat (usually called just sirloin tips) which are really best for kebabs.

In a recent issue of Cook's Illustrated, the editors reported that traditional marinades used for steak tips either do nothing or simply make the meat "mushy." The secret of great steak tips turned out to be salt (as in soy sauce) since it turned the marinade into a brine which helped the meat to absorb liquids and therefore remain juicier when cooked.

So, starting with soy sauce as a key ingredient, I put together a classic teriyaki sauce using soy, sake, mirin and brown sugar. I marinated meats for 1, 4, and 8 hours and found that 4 to 8 hours was optimum. I also felt that the marinade could use more flavor, so I tested garlic, ginger, sesame seeds, toasted sesame oil, scallions and chiles. The winners were garlic and toasted sesame oil. I marinated the steak for 4 hours and then grilled it over a two-level fire. As reported in Cook's Illustrated, I was amazed that the rare steaks were not as good as those cooked to either medium-rare or medium. The latter were more tender and, believe, it or not, juicier.

For an alternative marinade, I wanted to try a combination of olive oil, white wine or vinegar and salt. After much testing, I changed the white wine to white balsamic vinegar, added garlic, sugar, and a pinch of dried herb. I found that this marinade is best if the meat sits for about an hour and no more than 90 minutes. Otherwise, the texture of the meat is compromised.

MARINATED GRILLED SIRLOIN TIPS

I found that the meat is best if cut into pieces before marinating – just marinating a whole steak is OK, but the meat absorbs slightly less flavor and is a bit less juicy after cooking.

1 recipe marinade (see below)

2 pounds sirloin tip strips or steaks

1. Trim the meat of excess fat. Cut "strips" into 4-inch long pieces or steaks into 2 by 4-inch pieces. Combine the marinade and meat in a large zipper lock bag, pressing out as much air as possible. Marinate in the refrigerator for designated time flipping the bag about half way through the process.

2. Meanwhile, ignite 6 quarts of hardwood charcoal (briquettes are fine as well) and, once hot, arrange all the coals on one half of the grill. When the fire is medium hot (you can hold your hand 5 inches from the flame for no longer than 4 seconds) place the meat over the coals. Sear well on all sides, about 6 minutes, and transfer the meat to the cooler side of the grill. Continue to cook until desired doneness, about 4 to 5 minutes for medium-rare (130 degrees) and 5 to 6 minutes for medium (135 degrees). Transfer to a warm platter and tent with aluminum foil. Let sit for 5 minutes. Slice pieces thinly on the bias and serve immediately.

Serves 4 to 6.

TERIYAKI MARINADE

This marinade needs at least 4 hours (but no more than 8 hours) for optimum flavor and texture.

4 tablespoons soy sauce

2 tablespoons sake

2 tablespoons mirin

3 medium cloves garlic, minced or pressed

1 piece (1 inch) fresh ginger, minced, about 1 tablespoon (optional)

1 tablespoon brown sugar

1 tablespoon toasted sesame oil

1/4 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper

Combine all ingredients in a small bowl. Marinate for 4-8 hours.

OLIVE OIL AND WHITE BALSAMIC VINEGAR MARINADE

This marinade takes only an hour or so and, surprisingly, works well with steak.

1/4 cup olive oil

1 tablespoon white balsamic vinegar

3 medium garlic cloves, minced or pressed

1 teaspoon salt

1/4 teaspoon sugar

1/4 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper

1/8 teaspoon dried oregano or thyme

Combine all ingredients in a small bowl. Marinate for about 1 hour but no longer than 1 1/2 hours.

Harbor, Battle of the Bands will feature groups performing numbers which may be "plugged in" or acoustic. Plymouth Memorial Hall will provide professional sound and light, a drum kit and keyboard. The judges panel will consist of local professional musicians, music teachers and music writers, with a First Place prize of $300 and Second Place prize $100 at stake.

A registration process was required for all bands applying to the competition. And, to set the bar on a certain standard of quality control, one supposes, all bands were additionally required a recommendation from a high school or independent music teacher.

The typically colorful list of band names in Saturday's show includes Last At Bat, Rizen, Your Bitter End and Scarecrow Hill (all from Plymouth), Doc Holliday, Stop the Wombats and Blaaaah! (from Scituate), plus Store Bought Insanity (Hanson), Mindsett (Marshfield), The High Rise (Duxbury) and Twitch*27 (Carver) among others.

"Bands have been closed out of the contest this year, at least so far, but we encourage rock 'n' roll fans who appreciate local music to come out and support the bands at this event," Dubin said. "With continued interest and support, we might be able to do three of four of these shows a year."

"Battle of the Bands" will take place Saturday, June 14 at the newly renovated Plymouth Memorial Hall, 83 Court Street (Route 3A). Doors open at 6:30 p.m. and the "battle" begins at 7 p.m. Tickets are $10 and are on dale now at the Plymouth Memorial Hall Box Office. local musician friends, lead vocalist J. Walker, of Abington —who some observers have visually compared to Jim Morrison or a young, pre-Zeppelin Jimmy Page — and guitarist Brendan Flaherty, of Bridgewater. New drummer Jordan Perlson is also currently a Berklee College of Music student and lives in Boston.

The Legends disc is Condition Blue's most impressive recorded offering so far of the band's high-powered but hummable sound. It includes such club-set favorites as "Back To Life" and "Star Baby" (as catchy as the like-titled Guess Who hit of years gone by), plus the band gets adventurous with the trippy-mystical "The Flight of Indrid Cold" (with lyrics based on the legend of the Mothman Prophecies, the subject of a Hollywood feature film a few years ago) and the hook-heavy, post-modern psychodrama "Fight or Flight," with this lyric sampling:

"My friend's got a gun he killed on New Year's Day, My friend's got a gun he shoots a different way, No more pack the car and dust the fear away, No more shoots the breeze and combs his hair up, My friend's got a gun he shoots a different way, My friend's got a gun he killed on New Year's Day"

"The way we write songs is, in a sense, based on what our ears want to hear," said Jackson. "A lot of our sound has that 70s rock quality, the sort of thing that's not being done much anymore."

Condition Blue will play Miracle East in Abington Friday, June 13 at 9 p.m. For more information on the band visit www.conditionblue.net.

Hollywood and finding solitude. He loves the escapism of flying his small planes. He still does detail-oriented carpentry work — for himself — whenever he has the chance. And though he now lives in Los Angeles, the environmentalist within him still pines for the land in Wyoming that he bought about 20 years ago.

Although Ford is quiet about his love life, he can be outspoken on a movie set. He's happy to offer suggestions to directors.

"When I first started in movies, people weren't all that eager to hear what I thought," he recalls. "But that started to change a little bit around the time of 'American Graffiti,' when I worked for the first time with George Lucas. He wanted me to get a crewcut, and I suggested a white cowboy hat instead. And that was the first time that anybody listened to what I was saying and thought it was a good idea."

Speaking of Lucas, Ford says the script for the new Indiana Jones film, which Lucas will produce and Steven Spielberg will direct, is just about ready.

"We're about 80 percent through the process," he says. "Steven's got the script now, and I'll get my hands on it in a couple weeks. We should start shooting it in the summer of 2004. I think it'll work."

"Hollywood Homicide" opens nationally on June 13.

Fabulous foliages for the shady garden

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the dense, pewter gray cloud cover gradually parted, this season's most elusive and precious commodity, the sun, appeared boosting our spirits and offering hope for an extended period of warmer, drier weather. Sunshine and blue skies magically transform our moods and our landscapes as we venture forth with renewed energy and enthusiasm. Admittedly, the official summer season has yet to commence, but time grows short to plant tender annuals and vegetables in order to enjoy bountiful blooms and harvest those tasty rewards in the months to come.

Prolonged dampness has delayed my efforts to renovate several gardens but these dank days have afforded me time to prune many spring-blooming trees and shrubs as their blooms fade. Forsythia, lilacs, cherries, crabapples and PJM rhododendrons have been judiciously trimmed to thin, shape and promote bushier growth. Winter-damaged branches have been snipped back to strong healthy leaf buds as new foliage has slowly emerged. An application of a balanced 8-8-8 organic fertilizer around the base of these shrubs will help to encourage new growth.

Unfortunately, weeds seem to flourish no matter what adverse environmental conditions prevail, but many of these are particularly easy to extricate while the soil is soft. Care should be taken, however, not to walk on soggy terrain to avoid soil compaction. Many nutrients have been leached out of our soils due to our abundant rainfall and supplemental applications of fertilizer to lawns and gardens may be prudent this season to replenish depleted minerals.

While many plants have been adversely affected by this season's cool, damp weather, shade-loving flora have never appeared more luxuriant. Perhaps the loveliest of all are the astilbes. The exquisite, deeply divided, glossy foliage remains attractive all summer and offers a marvelous contrast to the broad leaves of hosta. Although last season's drought stressed many of these handsome perennials causing them to turn crispy, those that survived are truly a beauty to behold this season. The key to success with these charming perennials is to provide them with ample moisture throughout the growing season. If soils are rich, moist and irrigated regularly, they can be grown as magnificent specimens in full sun while they will most likely succumb under the shade of large maples where they cannot successfully compete with these thirsty, shallow-rooted trees. Enrich soils with plentiful quantities of organic matter including peat, compost, manure or leaf mold.

The lustrous foliage of astilbes makes these perennials worthy of a place in every shade garden but as an added bonus they produce glorious, feathery plumes in shades of pink, red, rosy-purple or white. Dozens of cultivars are available and if several varieties are grown, the delicate blooms of astilbes will grace your borders from late June to mid-August with heights ranging from under a foot to a stately 4-feet tall.

Equally appealing for their handsome, divided leaves, the bugbanes (Cimicifuga) are similar in appearance to the astilbes but generally exhibit greater stature providing an attractive companion for the broader leaves of hosta and Ligularia. These hardy perennials prefer moist soils in dappled to half shade. Several varieties of bugbane are available offering a progression of blooms from mid-July to early autumn. Cimicifuga racemosa produces tall white, fragrant wands that sway in the breeze, sometimes referred to as fairy candles, and provides a charming, delicate accent to the back of the border. New selections include 'Hillside Black Beauty' and 'Brunette' that exhibit stunning deep purple foliage and bloom later in the summer and C. simplex 'White Pearl' extends the season still further with white bottlebrush blooms in September and October.

The soft, cutleaf foliage of the goatsbeard family (Aruncus) offers still another textural leaf form to provide interest to partly shaded sites. The larger, common goatsbeard, A. dioicus, may reach 4 to 6 feet in height and produces a cloud of billowy white plumes reminiscent of astilbes. Ranking as one of my top ten plants for foliage, its cousin, the dwarf goatsbeard, A. aethusifolius, forms a heavenly 1-foot tall mound of ferny, deep-green leaves that remain handsome throughout the season, turning bright yellow in autumn. Tiny sprays of white flowers appear in June just above the mound, but the foliage is the star attraction and dwarf goatsbeard makes a sensational specimen for the front of the shady border.Several attractive grasses furnish an entirely different textural contrast for shady gardens. The family of sedges (Carex) forms dense clumps, many resembling mop heads, which range in height from 6-inches to 3-feet. A few varieties remain totally evergreen throughout the year although some will benefit from a spring haircut to remove winter-damaged foliage. The slender leaves may be variegated, a stunning lime-green to yellow (C. 'Bowles Golden') or an unusual delicate, pinkish-brown as demonstrated by the leather-leaf sedge, C. buchananii.

Perhaps the loveliest of all the ornamental grasses is Hakone grass, Hakonechloa macra 'Aureola', characterized by golden leaves highlighted with rich dark green stripes. This charming, graceful, arching grass slowly spreads to form a mound that cascades like a waterfall. Grow in humus-rich soil in light shade alongside ferns, hosta, and astilbes or nestled among rocks. Although there are many star performers to be found in the well-planned perennial border, foliage is always the predominant player, especially in the shady garden. The color, texture and overall appearance of a plant's leaves should be paramount when selecting plant material as the foliage is likely to be prominent for 6 months or more.

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

A CLEAR DIFFERENCE

To understand the difference between an analog hearing instrument and a newer digital instrument, it may help to think of an analog device as a car radio. That is, as you switch from station to station, you have to adjust volume and treble/bass settings in order to get the most enjoyment from each station. A digital instrument, on the other hand, utilizes a computer chip, which allows for more fluid adjustment from "station to station," or from, say, a quiet environment to a noisy one. That is because the computer chip in the digital instrument performs most of the adjusting for you. Other automatic adjustments might include amplifying sounds from a specific location (in front of you) for clearer sound.

For the majority of hearing impaired persons today, the reasons for not hearing perfectly well have practically disappeared with the advent of digital and other innovative designs from the hearing industry. Being aware of a hearing impairment, however, is still the first step toward restoring hearing. Visit FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER to ask questions and get answers. And why not schedule a free painless hearing test today at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth? Call 781-337-1144. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits and Mass Health.

P.S. A programmable analog hearing instrument runs on an analog circuit but is controlled by a computer chip. Thus, it falls between an analog and a digital instrument in capability.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 11

Roll up your sleeves and stay busy with practical projects today. Finish old business rather than starting anything new. The Scorpio moon continues to generate a serious, quiet mood. Spend time alone. Purse activities that help you to relax and maintain perspective. Ninety-degree lunar alignments to Neptune and Jupiter in the afternoon and evening caution you to keep a cool head. Don't overdo, overreact or go to extremes. Others may be moody and difficult to please.

THURSDAY, JUNE 12

A 90-degree alignment of Venus and Uranus may tempt you to play hooky and do something different today. The Scorpio moon forms challenging contacts to Mars and Mercury until 5:51 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Keep it light and sidestep altercations with others. The windup to this month's full moon begins at 6:12 p.m., when the moon enters Sagittarius. Mercury moves into Gemini at 9:34 p.m., remaining there until June 29.

FRIDAY, JUNE 13

Gear up for a hectic day. Emotions and energy run high, as the full moon continues to build. You can get a lot accomplished, if you make up a list of things to do and stick to it. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action for a few days. Avoid acting on impulse or taking risks. It's often difficult to sleep on the eve of a full moon, so it's okay to work or party late into the night.

SATURDAY, JUNE 14

The full moon culminates at 7:16 a.m., 23-degrees of the sign Sagittarius. The moon continues active travel in Sagittarius until 5:05 p.m., setting a quick pace. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Uranus also affects the day. Signing contracts, launching enterprises or making important decisions are off limits. Don't be too hasty in your judgments or too keen to commit yourself. Influences begin to turn around at 6:38 p.m., when the moon enters Capricorn. A lunar opposition to Saturn prompts you to plan a quiet evening. Rest and recharge your batteries. The Capricorn moon aligns with Uranus at 11:12 p.m. and becomes inactive.

SUNDAY, JUNE 15

No major planetary activity occurs today. The moon travels in Capricorn, but it forms no major alignments to planets; it is inactive. That means this is a day to catch up on unfinished business or follow through on promises and commitments to others. Be sure to take time for yourself, to relax and enjoy life's blessings.

MONDAY, JUNE 16

The Capricorn moon continues inactive travel until 8:41 p.m. Although influences are not favorable for starting anything new, they are ideal for getting old work projects out of way. The remainder of the week rates high for beginning new enterprises. This is a day to get your ducks in line. The moon enters social Aquarius at 8:41 p.m. The action planet Mars moves into Pisces at 10:25 p.m., remaining there until December 16. Mars will change its rate of motion and travel in retrograde beginning late July through September, bringing a challenging period.

TUESDAY, JUNE 17

The green light is on for new beginnings across the board. Pull out all the stops. New is in; old is out. Keep an open mind; you can make key discoveries and find solutions. An Aquarius moon also makes this day prime for networking with others in order to achieve your goals. Lunar alignments to Neptune and Jupiter set the stage for a social evening. Gather with friends and go for the good times.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 18

This is a day to break new ground in your business or personal life. If you have been contemplating making a change or beginning a new endeavor, start today. An innovative Aquarius moon prompts you to explore new horizons and develop new alliances. At 9:08 p.m. the moon forms a harmonious contact to the sun and becomes inactive. Group activities, team sports are highlighted this evening.

THURSDAY, JUNE 19

Planetary influences turn around completely today and tomorrow, as the moon travels in the last sign of zodiac, Pisces. The moon enters Pisces at 1:57 a.m., and an alignment to Uranus may disrupt the flow of the morning. Allow extra time for unanticipated distractions or obstacles. Fortunately, this influence passes over by mid-morning. The remainder of the day rates high for developing art, music, photography projects. Go with your first impression. Pay attention to your dreams.

FRIDAY, JUNE 20

The positive aspects of a Pisces moon are reinforced by harmonious alignments of Mercury and Venus to Neptune. Creativity, artistic sensitivity are at an all-time high. Follow your intuition. You can achieve breakthroughs and find new inspiration with projects that have been difficult to work through. On the other hand, this is not a favorable time for making practical decisions, purchases or long-range commitments. Mercury and Venus conjoin, setting the stage for a social evening. Relax and mellow out completely.

Selectman Merle Brown, Craig Miller of the Waterfield Design Group, Town Manager Mark Haddad and Karen Fitzgerald of Waterfield look at drawings of bump-outs planned for Depot Court during a walk-around of the Village Monday.

Board digs burying wires

Village project to move ahead

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

In a 4-1 vote, the Board of Selectmen decided Tuesday to accept the plan for an underground-wire system in Cohasset Village. The proposal is contingent on receiving $200,000 in private funding, and will also require looking at alternate bids for brick sidewalks (the plan calls for concrete). Selectmen said concern for safety is a major driving force behind the project, making the tricky intersection of South Main Street and Depot Court an essential focus.

The new plans would complete the streetscapes on South Main Street and Elm Street, with only paving on Brook Street and Depot Court, as they will need to be dug up to provide trenches for the wires. For additional safety, the plan proposes "bump-out" features at crosswalks, and the potential for either raised or grooved crosswalks to help slow traffic.

Selectman Fred Koed, who was the lone vote against the project, is not opposed to the plans, but wanted more time

CHS girls tennis is state champs

All signs pointed to a state championship. And that's just what they got.

Dedicating their 2003 run at a Div. II Massachusetts title to the memory of Cohasset athletic icon Clark Chatterton, who died in 2001, the team began looking for signs and omens of good look throughout the playoffs. Once the team defeated Manchester-Essex to receive the crown as the Eastern Mass champions, the signs for the state title match pointed only to good things.

Everything from the match's location (Clark University) to the license plate of the car in front of the team bus ("01CC") to the main character of the movie the team had coincidentally chosen to watch during their ride to Worcester (Clark Griswold) gave a good feeling to the team heading into their match last Wednesday at Tantasqua. And although their win over M-E featured much drama and heroics, the team danced to a 3-2 victory that was decided within a mere 45 minutes.

"It is actually very overwhelming," smiled 12th year Cohasset coach Gigi Meehan, who coached the team to its first state title in Cohasset High School history. "They all really pulled together."

Sun shines on Festival

Draws biggest crowd in years

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The large white tents of the Festival on the Common were erected once again last weekend, this year to an unfamiliar sight — sun!

Now in its 48th year, this annual community event brought entertainment, food, vendors and exhibits, with something for everyone to enjoy.

The beautiful weather drew a large crowd, with mothers pushing baby girls in strollers wearing princess crowns, old friends soaking up art, and everyone topping things off with a delicious strawberry shortcake.

With an estimate of more than 7,000 visitors over the three days, Event Coordinator Diane Kennedy was thrilled with the turnout. "We had one of the best crowds we've had in years," she said. "Everything worked out well for us."

There were more than 85 vendors with various crafts on display at the common. Ranging from jewelry made of sea glass to homemade soaps to hummingbird feeders, no two tables were alike. There were also many handmade baby and children's clothing items, handmade cards, as well as items for the home.

Some vendors travel from state to state on a regular basis visiting fairs, and some told Kennedy this was their best show ever. For people who travel to fairs in different states on a regular basis,

Changing school rules

Policy on alcohol incidents is fairer

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Next fall, students at Cohasset Middle High School may be surprised to see the face of a uniformed police officer among the crowd at a school dance. Those participating sports will see a change in how certain violations are dealt with, and seniors, who are first-time alcohol offenders, may still be able to attend graduation and the prom.

The student handbook, which is reviewed annually, will spell out policy changes regarding on-campus substance abuse, school dances, and punishment for athletes. The School Committee approved changes to the handbook that were based on suggestions made by the School Council, which considered past incidents involving CMHS students. The School Council is made up of parents, teachers, students and community members.

If caught using alcohol at any school or school-sponsored event, students of all grade levels were previously suspended from school for two days with a 30-day suspension from all sports teams and activities. As of next fall, seniors will be allowed to participate in certain senior activities, such as class night and graduation during their 30-day suspension, providing it is their first offense over the course of their four high school years.

The policy change will only be implemented for alcohol violations, with greater consequences still in place for drug use.

Legal issues dog train

Cost-benefit is still a factor

If Greenbush were in the dictionary, the preferred definition would be complicated.

There is no easy way to explain the controversy surrounding the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad restoration project. And there is no succinct, clear way to explain the legal wrangle that plagues the 17-mile train line that would extend from Weymouth to Scituate.

While the project continues to be bogged down with environmental challenges – the economic feasibility of Greenbush is still in doubt, according to state Sen. Robert Hedlund, a Greenbush critic.

The MBTA may have cleared a hurdle with the ruling earlier this month by an administrative law judge on a procedural matter to uphold the Department of Environmental Protection's issuance of a wetlands variance for Hingham portion of the project. This means that, if the DEP and the MBTA can prevail on the remaining issues, such as resolving the mitigation measures that are being

ZBA ponders future of King St. triangle

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

There is a flicker of hope that the biggest eyesore in the Town of Cohasset could be replaced with a colonial-style structure that includes office space and two one-bedroom apartments.

The 27,000 square foot "Rosano triangle" at the corner of lower King Street and Route 3A is best known for its dirt piles and construction equipment.

But the site's unattractive looks could be relegated to memory if the Zoning Board of Appeals issues a special permit allowing the commercial-residential use.

The decision, if granted, would be similar to one allowed back in 1992 when Joseph Rosano planned to develop the site with a building that would have included a doctor's office and residential apartment. While those plans ultimately fell through, Rosano is back seeking similar zoning relief.

The ZBA must grapple with the question of whether Rosano needs a "use" variance, something that is now prohibited under a bylaw change Town Meeting enacted a couple of years ago.

But Rosano and his lawyers assert a special permit is what is required on the non-conforming lot that is in a residential district.

Rosano attorney William Ohrenberger said the parcel is in a residential zone and is currently used as commercial property, and therefore the proposal would not be substantially different in character or more detrimental to the neighborhood — two tests that must be met under the zoning bylaw before a special permit can be granted.

Ohrenberger insisted the board does have the authority to grant the special permit in this case.

Rosano told the ZBA he grew up across the street and the triangle is no place to build a single-family home because of the traffic dangers.

"It is no place to build a four-bedroom home," he said, pointing out that two, one-bedroom apartments would not attract children.

The zoning board closed the public hearing and took the matter under advisement.

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall as of Tuesday, May 27:

Board of Assessors, July 1, 4 p.m.

Conservation Commission, June 26 at 7:30 p.m.

Planning Board, June 25 at 7:30 p.m.

Recreation Commission, June 18, 6 p.m.

Recycling Committee, June 7, 10 a.m., DPW garage

School Committee, June 19 at 7 p.m.

Selectmen, July 1 at 7:30 p.m.

Sewer Commission, June 30 at 6 p.m.

Zoning Board of Appeals, June 19 at 7 p.m. (3 Jerusalem Lane), June 30 at 7 p.m. (Avalon)

All meetings are at Town Hall unless posted otherwise.

Acting town manager

Police Chief Robert Jackson will serve as acting town manager next week while both Town Manager Mark Haddad and Finance Director Michael Buckley are on vacation.

"The town will be in good hands," Haddad told selectmen Monday.

Starbucks curb cut

Selectmen plan to take up the issue of the steep curb cut in front of the proposed Starbucks on Route 3A (in the former Fleet Bank building) at their July 1 meeting. Town Manager Mark Haddad said Tedeschi Plaza wants to leave the curb cut right where it is and has provided the town with a great deal of traffic data. Nevertheless, selectmen think the grade of the curb cut poses a danger. They say the coffee shop is going to attract more traffic than the bank. Selectman Michael Sullivan said the board was unlikely to approve the common victualler (food) license without some resolution of the safety issue.

Flag Day ceremony

Selectman Merle Brown praised the Sons of the American Legion and the Ladies Auxiliary for the flag burning ceremony Saturday at Woodside Cemetery. "It was very well done and very nice," he said. A new flagpole was also dedicated. Brown said the residents could still deposit their worn or faded flags in the flag depository outside the Legion Hall on Summer Street.

Raising the roof!

Town Manager Mark Haddad said a needed design change at the police-fire headquarters addition and renovation project involves raising the roof an additional eight feet. With the change, the three fire department doors will be the same height and will all be able to accommodate any fire engine. Initial plans called for just the middle door to be higher for the ladder truck.

"In the long run this is a more sound project for the town," he said.

Haddad said while there are enough funds in the budget to finish the project, it might be necessary to go back to Town Meeting for about $20,000 for furnishings. The fire department is being temporarily housed at the former Winter Garden skating rink site while the renovations are underway.

Tennis champs

Selectman Michael Sullivan congratulated the CHS girls tennis team on winning the state championship. It's the first Cohasset High team to win a state championship since the mid-1980s. Other board members echoed Sullivan's comments. Sullivan, whose daughter is on the team, praised the girls and coaches.

New road created

Town Manager Mark Haddad said a new road has been created for safety reasons from the former Winter Garden skating rink where the fire department is being housed during renovations at its Elm Street headquarters to North Main Street. The egress from the temporary firehouse improves response times, he said. It turns out the area is owned by the Department of Environmental Management, dubbed the DEM, and not the MBTA. Haddad said the town would seek a permit from the DEM "after the fact" and didn't anticipate any problems.

"It is a public safety issue and we needed to improve response times," he said. The MBTA plans to install an access road there anyway if the train project is built. The MBTA plans to build the train station at the Winter Garden site that it took by eminent domain from Graham Waste, which has moved across the street to Crocker Lane.

Town Counsel seminar

The seminar with Town Counsel and the zoning, health and planning boards, and conservation commission to discuss issues that confront permitting granting boards has been rescheduled for July 17 at 7:30 p.m. The workshop had to be rescheduled from June 19 because of the ZBA had hearings scheduled for that night.

Speed is a concern

The Burnett family of 45 Windy Hill Road and their neighbors are concerned with the speed vehicles travel along Jerusalem Road between Black Rock and Howe roads.

In a letter to selectmen, Bill Burnett proposed installing caution signs along with two blinking yellow lights. Town Manager Mark Haddad forwarded the request to DPW Supt. Carl Sestito.

Land-use workshop features Bob Lemire

The Growth and development Committee will host workshop that will be conducted by the noted author and land use consultant, Bob Lemire Tuesday, June 24 at 7:30 p.m. at Town Hall.

The workshop on Creative Land Development will bring together town officials and committees for an interactive session on land-use issues. Remaining developable lands, open space plans and housing needs, as well as best practices to help the town manage its own future and preserve its character and resources in a manner consistent with resident's desires are on the agenda.

As chairman of the Conservation Commission in Lincoln, Mass. for 15 years, Lemire became a recognized leader in developing ways to resolve land-use conflicts creatively and has helped make Lincoln a national model for land-use planning. He has taught at the Harvard Graduate School of Design and has consulted and lectured across the country..

Lemire's book, "Creative Land Development, Bridge to the Future" outlines the kind of proactive planning and action that can help Cohasset address its housing, resource and open space challenges. The public is invited to attend.

CHS has passed the test

Gets OK from accreditation team

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Commended in many areas, Jones feels particularly proud of the school's being recognized for its "use of mission statement to drive instructional strategies and practices."

After months of anticipation, Cohasset Middle High School has been awarded re-accreditation from the New England Association of Schools & Colleges. As a voluntary member of the program, CMHS is required to go through the re-accreditation process every 10 years.

Two years ago, CMHS began the self-assessment process in preparation of the evaluation, noting areas of strength and weakness in the seven broad standards of — mission and expectation, curriculum, instruction, assessment of student learning, leadership and organization, school-based resources for learning, and community-based resources for learning.

From there, a Visiting Committee from the NEASC spent from Sept. 29-Oct. 2, 2002 at CMHS, taking an objective approach at rating the school. The chair of the Visiting Committee wrote up a draft report, which was sent to Principal Mike Jones to be checked for factual accuracy, then sent back to be finalized for submission to the Commission on Secondary Education, which reviewed it, and made the final decision.

Commended in many areas, Jones feels particularly proud of the school's being recognized for its "use of mission statement to drive instructional strategies and practices." The school had revised the statement in February 2002 to solidify its philosophy, in anticipation of the re-accreditation process.

The school was also commended on "the development of the educational expectations document that defines the school's academic expectations for student learning in observable and measurable terms," and "the creation of comprehensive and detailed course syllabi that clearly describe course objectives and learning activities as well as the manner in which these activities will be assessed."

Schools receiving accreditation must submit a two-year progress report, which for CMHS will be October 2004, on actions taken regarding recommendations. "They expect one-third will be filled by the second year," Jones said.

CMHS will be working on providing "additional training for faculty in the use of a range of assessment strategies," which Jones thinks is a "valid recommendation." They will also "report the results of an evaluation of the rigor of the curriculum in all subject areas in terms of the extent to which it requires inquiry, problem-solving, critical thinking, and the authentic application of knowledge, indicating steps to address identified needs."

Jones believes one of the stronger recommendations was to "report increase in interdisciplinary instruction." The wording suggests the school must have an increase, rather than just make progress for their follow-ups. "I think we need to pay attention to that one," Jones said.

One recommendation which has already been taken care of was the need to "develop and implement a plan to ensure the safe purchase, storage, use, and disposal of all hazardous materials." An outside consulting firm was hired to implement a plan, leaving one less recommendation to be tackled.

In light of the recommendations, seven committees have been appointed, one for each of the seven standards, to make suggestions and timelines to ensure the appropriate changes will be made in a prompt fashion. Jones also notes "the report will help legitimize budget requests. It's not just our opinion, it's the opinion of an accredited agency."

The two-year report will be followed-up by a five-year progress report in 2007.

Finding fault with 40B

By Amy Lambiaso
AMY.LAMBIASO@STATEHOUSENEWS.COM

South Shore lawmakers are calling a report that includes an extensive set of recommendations to revamp the state's so-called anti-snob zoning law, Chapter 40B, as "disappointing" because it does not go far enough to change the 34-year-old affordable housing law.

"It doesn't substantially address the issue of communities retaining some level of local control over these projects," says state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham.

A task force, appointed in February by Gov. Mitt Romney, House Speaker Thomas Finneran, D-Mattapan, and Senate President Robert Travaglini, D-East Boston, released its recommended changes to Chapter 40B last week voicing support for the preservation of the controversial law.

The report is now in the hands of the joint Committee on Urban and Housing Development, which is also grappling with some 68 bills filed to amend the law, and will hold a public hearing on the measures June 24.

A total of 17 recommended changes accompany the report, varying from allowing cities and towns to reach the state mandated threshold of affordable housing stock faster by counting more market rate ownership units, to expanding the process of community board's input in the 40B filing process — a current gripe of many local officials.

"Frankly, I'm disappointed," said Marshfield Democrat Rep. Frank Hynes. "The changes don't reflect sufficient understanding of the stress many communities are facing with this issue, nor do they offer significant change."

Bradley said one recommendation that he finds ludicrous is allow lending institutions to reject an application if they don't believe in the site.

"Why can the banks say what's right – and Hingham, Cohasset, Hull and Scituate officials can't?" he asked. Bradley said communities should have the right to reject projects outright in certain situations.

Lawmakers, including Bradley, Hynes and state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, have offered a slew of proposals to overhaul the 40B system, including efforts to invoke a moratorium on all 40B projects and allowing local zoning boards more authority in denying comprehensive permits.

Hedlund also said the task force report's recommendations don't do the job.

"The whole process started with the premise you can take 40B and make it work – you can't," he said.

Chapter 40B has come under much scrutiny since its development in 1969, with most suburban communities arguing the law handicaps local boards with its ability to skirt many zoning regulations and defy development wishes of neighborhoods and local officials. Communities where less than 10 percent of total housing stock is deemed affordable are subject to 40B developments where 20-25 percent of the units to be built are below market value. Thirty-one of the Commonwealth's 351 municipalities have reached the 10 percent level.

"All this did was apply a few Band-Aids to the patient's body," Hynes said of the report. "Instead of recognizing the cause of the problem, they come in with a Band-Aid that is not very helpful to the local boards in the long run."

Critics voiced concern with several areas of the report, saying the recommended changes don't go far enough. Under the task force's report, 50 percent of ownership housing units built under 40B could be counted toward the municipality's 10 percent total threshold. Currently, only the 25 percent deemed affordable are counted, whereas 100 percent of rental units built are counted as affordable.

Authors of the report suggest this provision speaks to both developers and communities by maintaining the incentive for building rental units in a community, while providing a faster route to reach the 10 percent threshold. Special funds are set up in the recommendations to help offset extensive costs in reviewing 40B applications and conducting hearings, often lasting more than a year. Communities would also be allowed to count units in a nearby town toward its own threshold if the burden stretched beyond borders. The proposal also addresses "smart guidelines" for Chapter 40B in locating developments near public transportation. Whether suburban communities could count mobile homes as affordable housing was left for further study, the report said.

Communities would be allowed to deny a 40B application if a certain number of units was already under review by the local board, under the recommendations. A brief break in applications could also be rendered if the city or town increased its total affordable housing stock by .5 percent in the last year.

Beach gate is a lot of headaches

But second exit won't be closed

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Sandy Beach Association would like to lock the gate at the north or Nichols Road end of the town parking lot at the beach to help keep out-of-towners from using the popular location.

Robin Lawrence, president of the association, told selectmen closing the gate would also improve safety. He related a story about two women who were the victims of a "flasher" several years ago when the north gate was locked. The suspect was apprehended quickly after police were called because there was only one way out and a lifeguard blocked the south (Sheldon Road) exit with his car.

Lawrence also said visibility at the south entrance-exit — which has been a concern of selectmen — is better since the island there has been improved.

He explained with the north gate open it is more difficult to prevent those without resident stickers to park there. On busy days the number of out-of-towners enjoying a day on Sandy Beach can be as high as 20 percent, he said.

He noted a parking ticket at the beach is $25 — not a lot for a carload of kids with their friends to spend for a day at the beach.

Lawrence suggested towing the cars would be a greater deterrent, but Selectman Michael Sullivan balked at the idea. Sullivan said the cars without stickers could belong to residents or their children. He said towing should be a last resort.

Selectmen opted not to close the gate altogether as requested, but did reach a consensus to close the north gate at dusk rather than 10 p.m.

Student timelines give local events historical perspective

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Students in Cynthia Gordon's eighth-grade world history class made history themselves, as the first group of students to use a new set of illustrated timelines, created by the education subcommittee of the Committee on Town History. The timelines, which are based on Cohasset's three books on town history, will serve as a way for students to tie Cohasset's past into world events.

Made up of six different colored wall panels, the timelines cover events from the town's inception to the present. As part of an ongoing effort by the committee to raise interest in Cohasset's past, Lou Harvey, chairman of the education subcommittee said they are a great way to "bring history to life."

Nancy Garrison, who has been working with the Committee as the designer for the timelines, said the panels were made as a means of appealing to a younger audience. The books written on the town's history are meant to "reach adults, not necessarily kids," she said. "This is a medium to reach kids."

Nancy Garrison, right, who designed the timelines, points to an important historical event as Committee on Town History members Wigmore Pierson and Lou Harvey look on.

According to curriculum coordinator, Ruth Fennessey, the timelines can accompany lessons in any grade. While the written material is geared toward an eighth-grade level, a teacher-directed lesson and the pictures provide wonderful information for younger children. She also said that each school will have its own set of six panels, as well as 25, 11in. by 17 in. laminated replicas for children to study at their desks.

Students in Gordon's history class took turns reading aloud from the laminated copies. They compared what they knew about world history with what they were learning about Cohasset. Gordon asked the students if they could see similarities between the larger picture and Cohasset, such as the United States wanting to break away from Britain and Cohasset's wanting to break away from Hingham. "Is Cohasset a reflection of each time period we've studied?" she asked.

Students also discussed the possibility of the train coming back to town. Gordon sparked some interesting conversation with the question, "the train once before made it the town it is today, couldn't we benefit from it again?"

> "This is a medium to reach kids."
> — Nancy Garrison, timeline designer

Students became very engaged in the conversation, and members of the committee who attended the class to see their efforts in use were very impressed with the response. While other projects geared toward the younger members of town have been started in the past, they never got off the ground. Chairman of the Committee on Town History Wig Pierson said, "this is the first time it's been really successful."

Everyone involved sees a bright future for the history project. So far, the trilogy of books have done remarkably well, selling more than 2,000 copies. Volumes one and two have been re-issued with new dust jackets which Pierson said, "add a lot of spice." All three volumes are available for purchase at Buttonwood Books and Toys. Proceeds from previous book sales made production of the timelines possible.

Gordon sees the lessons learned to be of great value to students as they make their way through the school system. "Hopefully when they're voters, they'll be more informed," she said. By presenting history in a way that students can relate, it puts things on a more personal level.

At the end of class, students had a much better understanding of how their little town had had an impact on events throughout the country. Cohasset men fought and died in wars, they started industry, and made the town what it is today. At the sound of the bell, Gordon reminded students, "You are the future of Cohasset, and the decisions you make over the next few years will be what I teach in the future."

Father and son support Relay

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

While most fathers and sons spend time playing catch or talking, Ed Lappen and his son Ross Lieb-Lappen are fighting to find a cure for cancer.

For the past seven years, the duo have been participating in the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life, an overnight, benefit event in which teams members take turns either running or walking laps, trying to keep one team member on the course at all times.

The Lappens began their involvement in the Relay in 1996. A close family friend had been diagnosed with cancer and the Relay seemed like a wonderful way to make a contribution to the cause. They named their team G-force in honor their friend, Gary Garber.

The following year, Garber's health seemed to be improving, and he eventually went into remission. He was even able to attend Ross' bar mitzvah. That year, Ross started his own Relay team, including Garber's son, while Ed carried on his team with adults. Unfortunately the following March, the cancer in Garber's body became to aggressive and Garber passed away.

The Lappens continue to participate in the Relay in Garber's memory. "I really enjoy spending the night with a bunch of guys who all knew Gary." "It's more than just a fund-raiser, it's still to this day emotional for me," said Ed.

But the Relay has been a very big success, and Ed was the highest fundraising individual this year, raising more than $5,500. "I was pretty happy with that," he said.

Ross is a recent graduate of CMHS and will be off to Middlebury next fall. He said he will return to Cohasset to participate in next year's Relay. The year after, he hopes to start a college Relay and get students from his future college involved.

Mary Shepherd, of the American Cancer Society, has been very delighted with Ross' ambition and drive. " I have been so impressed by his initiative and dedication. I was blown away when I saw him sit a teacher down at on e of the Team Captain meetings who said she just couldn't get a team together. He explained to her how to get the team going, who to talk to and helped her recruit — how many high school students do you know would do that?" she said.

Ed said he will also continue to participate in the Relay, in the hopes of raising awareness and keeping the memory of his friend alive. "I'll do it for as many years as they continue to have it."

Senior students' piano recital held

A joint piano recital by three advanced students of Olive Mullen took on Sunday evening, June 8 at the James Library and Center for the Arts in Norwell Center.

Ross Lieb-Lappen and Nicole Hall are graduating seniors from Cohasset and Scituate respectively, and Sarah Lambert of Cohasset is about to become a senior.

The program included solos and duets by Albeniz, Arensky, Chopin, Debussy, Gershwin, Joplin, MacDowell, Mendelssohn, Maskowski, and Noona.

Handbook spells out rule changes

Principal Mike Jones supports the amendment, stating the policy had been informally implemented by his predecessor, former CMHS Principal Curtis Collins. To make it an official standard, "I thought it should be in the policy," he said.

Assistant Principal, Jack DeLorenzo is also in favor of the change. To exclude students from a game or two is much different than exclusion from senior year activities. "That is something they have earned," he said.

For students participating in sports, the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association currently has a "24/7" rule, that any student found in violation of the drug and alcohol policy, at any time, will automatically be suspended from athletic competition for two games or14 days, whichever encompasses the most contests.

The policy change will only be implemented for alcohol violations, with greater consequences still in place for drug use.

Previously, CMHS had a tougher rule regarding off campus violations than the MIAA, which stated that any athlete caught in violation would receive a 30-day suspension from all school-sponsored activities. If caught drinking at a party on the weekend, students participating in athletics would then be banned from any school-sponsored activity, while students who may participate in drama or other extracurricular activity, who had committed the same offense, would receive no punishment for their off-campus activities.

Upon review of this rule, Jones immediately thought, "we should adjust our policy to make it fair."

As a result, the handbook has been amended to include only suspension from athletic activity in light of an off-campus violation, and not other school-sponsored activities.

Partially in light of previous incidents at school dances, the handbook has also been changed to outline specific procedures to be taken when a student is suspected of being under the influence of alcohol. There will be a member of the police force in attendance at the dances, to serve as a possible deterrent as well as backup for the administration, should problems arise.

Students suspected of being under the influence will be taken aside by a member of the administration, and questioned. Where there is a difference of opinion regarding the student's condition, they will be given the option of taking a breathalyzer test at the police station.

"We want to offer students who wish to appeal the judgement of the administration, the option of taking a breathalyzer at the station," Jones said. "Rather than have the decision rely on the person in charge, we'll offer the option for objective proof."

Jones went on to say that the administration is reluctant to be placed in the role of law enforcement, and has not yet decided whether schools should have their own breathalyzer available for such an occasion. While he has heard of a similar program in Norwell that has seemingly worked well, he's not sure Cohasset is ready just yet.

"We're trying to send students a message, but we're also trying to be fair," he said.

Complex legal issues still dog Greenbush sought by the Town of Hingham, then, the variance can be issued without the MBTA first filing for a new wetlands permit application with the Hingham Conservation Commission, as the commission had hoped.

Last fall, Hingham Conservation Commission appealed the DEP variance saying the information the MBTA submitted did not sufficiently describe the site, the work and the work's impacts on the town's wetlands resources. AfTA (Advocates for Transportation Alternatives) also filed an appeal on the grounds the project didn't meet conditions for granting a variance.

"It was not a victory for us," Conservation Commission chairman Joseph M. Fisher said about the ruling. But Fisher said the issue is not dead as far as the commission is concerned. "It is our intention to appeal," he said

The administrative law judge also said the variance does not violate the Massachusetts Endangered Species Act because it does not authorize an unpermitted "taking" of endangered species or an unpermitted alteration of "significant habitat."

The MBTA needs a variance because the project will fill more than 5,000 square feet of wetlands area, exceeding guidelines in the Massachusetts Wetlands Protection Act. In fact in Hingham alone, the project impacts more than an acre of wetlands.

But the conservation commission's appeal of the judge's recent ruling must wait until the hearing on the remaining points, such as AfTA's contention there are reasonable alternatives. And, the judge won't set a date for the hearing until the fiscal year 2004 state budget is in place.

Terry Fancher of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, which is backing Greenbush, said the news was positive for the train because it will be precedent-setting when the expected appeals to DEP wetlands variances in Cohasset and Scituate come down the line.

Fancher conceded the legal challenges have stalled the project. "But the good new is the process is working and justice is working as well," he said.

Meanwhile, Hedlund, R-Wemouth, says money and transportation planning issues concerning Greenbush are still before the Romney administration. The MBTA put a hold on Greenbush construction in February to resolve outstanding permitting and right-of-way issues; Romney then said his administration would review the economic feasibility of the project.

Hedlund said the bottleneck at Braintree where the three lines would converge as they head to South Station precludes the MBTA from expanding service on the Plymouth and Middleboro lines, which are over capacity. He said the Plymouth-Carver area is expected to grow by 22 percent in the years ahead, while Greenbush towns are expected to have minimal growth. Also, as redevelopment plans for the Weymouth Naval Air Station become firm – the South Weymouth station on the Plymouth Line becomes key to plans at the former air base.

"If the goal is to take cars off Route 3, then it makes sense to add capacity to Plymouth and Middleboro," Hedlund said.

to discuss raised crosswalks, which Selectman Michael Sullivan brought up for the first time during a village walk-around Monday afternoon.

The plans, drawn by the Waterfield Group, were centered around burying the wires, taking into consideration the available budget of $1.8 million, including $200,000 in private funding. Waterfield looked at what would be involved in running the wires behind both sides of the village — up Highland Avenue and through the town parking lot. But the plan turned out to be expensive and would require cutting down trees both on Highland Avenue and in the municipal lot.

"The bottom line at the end of the day is that it is more expensive to do the re-wiring scheme than the underground," said Lisa Bailey of the Waterfield Group.

In order to complete an underground wire system, previous plans needed to be scaled back, leaving only those streetscape changes that could be accomplished within the budget. The new plan would provide conduits for the wires and the footings, but not actual light posts, which could be installed at a later date. The lights and installing the wires underground could cost an additional $600,000.

In preparation for the meeting Selectmen held a walking tour with the Waterfield Group Monday, taking a look at the marks on the South Main Street indicating where bump-outs would be located. The Fire Department was asked to bring its largest ladder truck to test maneuverability around the proposed bump-outs. A specific area of concern included taking a left onto Depot Court from South Main Street.

The left-hand turn onto Depot, which has an island in the middle, has been rumored to be a tight squeeze for fire trucks as it stands right now, but the trucks are able to make the turn. "I've never heard the fire chief complain," said Town Manager, Mark Haddad.

The proposed changes to the intersection at Depot Court mean a loss of 23 feet total with the removal of the center island and proposed bump-outs on each side. Members from the Waterfield Group noted that 12 feet is standard for any one side of a road and at 15 feet, Depot Court would still be three feet wider than is required.

Selectmen are considering placing sandbags to delineate bump-outs in the Village to see how traffic might be affected, but Haddad notes that "it really makes no sense to do it," since the markings require a shift of parking spaces, which will affect the entire Village.

With the completed project and addition of bump-outs, parking will be shifted, but only one parking spot will actually be lost.

After attending the walk through, Ralph Dormitzer presented sample modifications at Tuesday's meeting, which he came up with along with his wife Jackie Dormitzer and Ann Whelan, who are both members of the Village Renaissance Committee. They made suggestions which they believe could help renovate the Village to reflect the priorities of the townspeople at a more reasonable cost.

In order to complete an underground wire system, previous plans needed to be scaled back, leaving only those streetscape changes that could be accomplished within the budget.

Their plan omitted the bump-outs at Tedeschi's and Depot Court at the South Main Street, and suggested leaving the center island where it is at the Depot Court intersection.

Other priorities in the proposal included the consideration of using brick as the paving material on the main sidewalks, stating they are the paving material of choice for people in town.

Another idea proposed at the meeting was the possibility of charging utilities "rent" to use the underground conduits as a way of funding the second phase of the project. Depending on the amount charged, it is estimated that the town could generate enough funds in five years to cover the cost of undergrounding the wires. Haddad said he will be in touch with Town Counsel to look into that option.

Some at Tuesday's meeting were concerned about the village becoming a "cityscape", and worried about losing the historical character. But the overwhelming majority of people in attendance were in favor of the underground wiring, even if they weren't in total agreement with the entire proposal.

"If undergrounding is the way to go, this is the plan that will allow it and allow for expansion in the future," Haddad said.

Respect for the flag

Most of us have shed a tear at events when Old Glory is raised or lowered. We place our hand over our heart or salute as the Star Spangled Banner or other patriotic music is played.

Pride in our flag is something most Americans share.

But today with the Stars and Stripes adorning everything from running shorts to plastic cups, most of us have no understanding of how to show respect for our flag on a regular basis.

However, here in Cohasset we can thank the American Legion post, and in particular the Sons of the American Legion led by Thomas Wigmore, for providing us with the opportunity to properly dispose of old American flags.

Over the past several months, dozens of residents dropped off some 600 old flags at the depository in front of the Legion Hall on Summer Street.

On Saturday, the Sons, along with members of the VFW, Legion and Legion Ladies Auxiliary, conducted a flag burning ceremony at Woodside Cemetery – where tattered flags that had served their purpose as symbols of our patriotism – were burned in a dignified manner.

The Sons plan to make the ceremony an annual event on Flag Day, which is the anniversary of the Continental Congress' Flag Resolution on June 14, 1777. The resolution established the flag as having 13 alternating red and white stripes; and the white stars (13 at the time) on a blue field. Flag Day was officially established by the Proclamation of President Woodrow Wilson in 1916. And in 1949, President Harry Truman signed an Act of Congress designating June 14 of each year as National Flag Day.

Most of us mean no harm when we allow flags displayed on our homes or atop flag poles at our businesses to become worn. But, truthfully, that is a sign of disrespect. We owe it to all those who fought for our flag – which is the symbol of the freedom we enjoy – to ensure our old flag is either cleaned and mended, or retired and replaced when it is no longer fit to serve as a symbol of our country.

The red, white and blue of Old Glory, no matter how small or large, should be vibrant – the edges crisp. A bright, fresh flag shows we continue to renew our belief in all that the Stars and Stripes stand for.

Here are some tips for displaying the flag:

- On a vehicle — Attach the flag to the antenna or clamp the flagstaff to the right fender. Do not lay the flag over the vehicle.
- On a building — Hang the flag on a staff or on a rope over the sidewalk with the stars away from the building.
- Over the street — Hang the flag with the stars to the east on a north- south street or north on an east-west street.
- Above other flags — Hang the flag above any other flag on the same pole
- Other flags, separate poles — Hang all flags on equal poles. Hang the U.S. flag on its own right, hoist it first and lower it last.
- In a window — Hang the flag vertically with the stars to the left of anyone looking at it from the street.
- Half-staff — This is a sign of mourning. Raise the flag to the top of the pole then lower it to the half way point. Before lowering the flag, raise it to the top again at the end of the day.
- Upside down — An upside-down flag is considered a distress signal.
- Multiple staffs — If you display the flag on a staff with other flags around it, place the flag at the center and highest point. Crossed staffs - Keep the flagstaff higher and on its own right.
- In a hall or lobby — Hang the flag vertically across from the main entrance with the stars to the left of anyone coming through the door.

Callahan will miss Deer Hill

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the students, staff, and parents for all the assistance that they gave me for the last seven years as the principal of the Deer Hill School. It has been a privilege to have worked with and for you.

Thank you to the students, staff, and parents who worked on our many Make a Difference Days. Before all the renovations and additions were done to the school we cleaned, painted, landscaped, built a playground, and generally made a difference in the physical appearance. But it was more than a physical difference to the school, we also worked on the metaphysical difference, It was the old-fashioned barn-raising attitude that we developed as part of the Deer Hill Family.

Thank you to the parents, staff, and community representatives who served on the Deer Hill School Council. During the school vacations in the 1996-1997 school year those parents and I totally renovated the teachers room. That made a difference and added to the staff's enjoyment of the building and also to let the staff know that they were appreciated.

Thank you to the parents who were the PSO representatives to the Deer Hill School. I appreciate all the fundraisers that were done in order to augment the budget for the school. The curriculum enrichment programs that have been brought to the school have enriched the lives of the students and staff

Thank you to the sixth grade staff who devoted their time and effort to make the trip to Camp Bournedale so successful for the grade six students. As a staff we would stay overnight for the week or part of the week in order to make the trip so enjoyable for the students. It was a personal sacrifice away from our own family in order to help the Deer Hill Family.

President John F. Kennedy has said, "Children are the world's most valuable resource and its best hope for the future." I know that Deer Hill has been a valuable part of your child's life. I hope that I have been a valuable part of your child's future in my years at Deer Hill.

I shall miss the Deer Hill School. My memories will be dear in my heart. Thank you.

Bring on the train!

TO THE EDITOR:

It seems that some people hate taking the train so much that they resort to desperate measures. The anti-Greenbush club's most recent allegation that the state is violating mitigation agreements is a prime example. With no proof whatsoever to back this statement up, they nonetheless boldly strive to delay the return of the South Shore commuter rail, for what appears to be the sake of inconvenience.

The Romney Administration placed a six-month halt on construction last February so that they could re-evaluate the project. That being said, wouldn't it be more effective to let the facts dictate the fate of Greenbush? Declaring that the state has violated an agreement without any evidence will only delay, not stop, construction.

If the "AGC" is so sure that the T in not in compliance with the mitigation agreements, I challenge them to cite some specific examples that prove it.

Having driven on Route 3 at the height of rush hour traffic, I am, perhaps, biased towards an easier mode of transportation. I would wager that thousands of other daily commuters share this bias. Restoration of the Greenbush line would lure thousands of drivers from the roadway to the subway. The result would be a faster and more convenient ride for everyone. So what are we waiting for?

More points of view at GOP

TO THE EDITOR:

Finally, someone has spoken up on behalf of the silent majority! Gov. Weld's Op-Ed in the Boston Globe, May 31 was well written and really hit the nail on the head. As Republicans, we all agree that the GOP message on national and economic security is an imperative message to get out to the public. Similarly, we all agree that only a perfect world would yield a party in which all members agree on every issue.

In order for the GOP to amass a strong network of support in the upcoming elections of 2004 and beyond, it is imperative that we look beyond a narrow definition of "republican" and welcome differing points of view on difficult social issues.

For many women, one of the single most important factors that exists in the decision to vote for a Democrat or Republican is the pro-choice factor. Until we recognize that the core Republican values of individual liberty, freedom and privacy actually promote the pro-choice agenda, the GOP will be hampered in efforts to advance their message on national and economic security.

America's least wanted: alien plants part II

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

As usually happens after I write a column, I become so aware of a particular plant or animal that I begin to see it everywhere. Such has been the case since writing, last month, about invasive (alien) plants, proving (unless, of course, I'm imagining that I see invasives everywhere) that certain plants, have, indeed, infested our natural areas, parks, woodlands and roadsides.

Last month we looked at the Multiflora rose, Purple loosestrife and Japanese knotweed. This month, we'll look at several more of America's least wanted plants, though the notion of "least wanted" is, like beauty, subjective. Few will dispute the aesthetic appeal of the aliens, their graceful blooms, showy color displays and captivating fragrances. Indeed, the aesthetics are why aliens were introduced and why they gained popularity so quickly. Appearances, as we all know, are seductive, and if physical beauty rather than ecological implications were the sole consideration, alien species would have few detractors.

Though many alien plants co-exist nicely with native plants and occupy but a small niche, some have begun to tip the balance of nature, crowding and displacing native plants, reducing native wildlife habitat and altering native ecosystems. With their prolific seed production, highly successful seed dispersal, rapid growth and maturity, rampant proliferation and few natural enemies, aliens are homogenizing the landscape. If we think of the native flora (and fauna) as Mom and Pop enterprises, then certain alien species are the mega-malls, sprouting up the same franchises on every street corner in America and swallowing up the independent habitats. What we lose, ultimately, is our unique local heritage.

I confessed last month that I am as guilty as the next fellow in this "mega-malling" of the landscape. My yard is filled with alien species that I am able to control with weeding and pruning. But now I wonder about the escapees, the seeds that leave my yard by way of birds, wind or shoe soles and root themselves in a nearby woods or along the roadsides, places I won't be tending. Left alone to flourish (and they will), in short time the plants will be virtually impossible to eradicate.

I'm seeing just such a situation with the burning bush - a favorite of landscapers - in my yard. There were two bushes in the yard when we moved in years ago and just recently we decided to remove one to make way for an enlarged pumpkin patch. just the other day I noticed that new bushes are sprouting up around the yard. Small and few enough to easily remove, the situation is still manageable, but I suspect that other bushes are readily rooting in the surrounding woods.

Introduced to the United States in the 1860s as an ornamental shrub, the burning bush, also known as the winged burning bush or winged euonymous, is native to northeastern Asia and Central China. Adaptable to a variety of soils, the dense shrub grows well in full sun or full shade, reaching heights and widths of more than 20 feet and shading out native herbs and shrubs. Its red fruits, a favorite of birds, are dispersed wherever birds roost, which often means quiet woodlands away from human activity. The shrub's appeal for home gardeners is its spectacular red foliage in the fall. By late autumn the leaves drop, revealing the corky, grooved stems.

Another alien - and not to be confused with our native species - is the family of shrub honeysuckles (Bella, Fragrant, Amur, Morrow's) whose native range is Japan, China, Korea and Southern Russia. Introduced in the mid-1800s, the shrubs have been cultivated since as ornamentals. Leafing out early in the spring and growing upright to 16 feet, the bush honeysuckles invade woodland edges, abandoned fields, pastures and roadsides, though some species are at home in boggy areas and along, lakeshores. The alien honeysuckles decrease available light by forming a dense layer that crowds out native species such as beach plum and blueberry as well as ferns, grasses and wildflowers that serve as habitat for small animals. Honeysuckles also alter habitat by depleting soil moisture and nutrients and releasing toxins into the soil that inhibit other plant species from growing. Competing for pollinators with native species, the aliens produce abundant fruits with many seeds that ensure the continued proliferation of the alien shrubs. But, unlike the fruits of native species, they are not the nutrient-rich food source necessary for migrating birds.

Still another Asian import is the tongue-twisting Ampelopsis brevipedunculata, better known as the Porcelain berry, a deciduous climbing vine of the grape family. My yard is filled with the plant which I started years ago from a rooting my father gave me. He had found the vine growing along North Street and helped himself to a cutting.

Porcelain-berry (Ampelopsis brevipedunculata)

Garlic Mustard (Alliaria petiolata)

Though slow to establish, Porcelain berry is a hardy species and a vigorous grower and self-sower, adaptable to a variety of soil and light conditions. It was introduced by the horticultural trade as an ornamental and quickly became a favorite bedding and screening plant. Though its foliage is a handsome dark green to blue-green and is resistant to most blights and insects (I had a Japanese beetle - another invader which arrived in 1916 - infestation about 10 years ago but nothing since), the vine's distinguishing feature is its handsome fruit. Borne in clusters (like grapes) but with a porcelain appearance, the fruits range in color from white to yellow, green, lilac, amethyst, turquoise and deep blue. All of the colors are usually found in a single duster. Anyone with the vine will have the added advantage of seeing the eight-spotted forester moth with its black wings and yellow and white spots. Flying by day, the moth is a frequent visitor to the porcelain vine.

One of the more aggressive alien species with European origins is English ivy (Hedera helix), introduced by homesick European immigrants (as were sparrows and starlings) as a reminder of the old country. An evergreen climbing vine in the ginseng family, English ivy attaches to tree trunks, brickwork and other surfaces with small, root-like tentacles that release a glue-like substance.

Aggressive in its growth and spread, English ivy grows densely on both the ground and into the forest canopy, thus threatening all levels of the landscape. Its abundant leaves prevent sunlight from reaching other plants on the ground and on host trees that can become smothered in foliage. The added weight makes the trees vulnerable to wind and storm damage.

English ivy easily reproduces vegetatively by cuttings or from stems that make contact with soil, and by seed which is dispersed primarily by house sparrows, starlings and cedar waxwings.

All along the lush green roadsides and in the shady woodlands, the plant with the distinctive garlic odor is garlic mustard (Alliaria petiolata), a native of Europe and Asia. Introduced to North America by European settlers for use as a medicinal and in cooking, garlic mustard is an invasive biennial herb whose first-year plants form rosettes of dark evergreen kidney-shaped leaves. In its second year, garlic mustard grows a stem up to three feet high with clusters of four-petaled flowers and sharply toothed, triangular leaves. An abundance of black seed, found in rows in long, narrow capsules called siliques, guarantees a steady regeneration of garlic mustard. Indeed, a stand of the herb can double in three or four years.

Winged Burning Bush (Euonymus alatus (Thunb.) Siebold)

Morrow's honeysuckle (L. morrowi)

So, what's an ecologically-minded individual to do to stem the alien "wildfire." First, we need to acknowledge that we humans are the culprits. We introduced the plants and enabled them to proliferate by disturbing the landscape with clear cutting and wetlands destruction. That having been said, and with the horse, indeed, out of the barn, the best we can do is prevent further disturbance of the landscape and halt the spread of invasive species. Home gardeners can be the first line of defense by replacing aliens such as Japanese barberry, Oriental bittersweet, Canada thistle, rose multiflora, purple loosestrife, bush honeysuckles and Norway maples with native plants including inkberry, swamp azalea, highbush blueberry, beach plum, bayberry, trumpet honeysuckle, sugar maple, Joe Pye weed, Virginia creeper, cat-tail, sweet pepperbush and winterberry.

Unfortunately, the problem of aliens is not confined to plant habitats. Alien animals are also wreaking havoc on the ecosystem. Next month - creatures run amok.

Baseball's biggest milestone ignored

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Seems like every time you turn around, baseball is going ape over some milestone, like the time Luke Appling hit 19 consecutive foul balls in the left field stands or the time Ellis Kinder pitched three innings of sterling relief with a blood alcohol content of 1.4.

That's why I'm surprised that baseball is missing the big one.

This week is the 167th anniversary of the first baseball game, played on June 19, 1846 between the New York Knickerbockers (don't call them the Knicks) and a nameless team called the New York nine on the Elysian Fields, a picnic grounds in Hoboken, N.J.

The New York nine won, 23-1, and, no, Steve Buckley didn't cover the game for the Herald.

Some form of baseball had been played in the United States since they were colonies under the names of "one old cat," "town ball," "soak ball," "round ball," or even "base ball." Princeton College banned it in 1787 as "low and unbecoming gentlemen students."

No, Albert Belle and Pete Rose weren't students at Princeton that year.

The baseball that was played that fine spring day in 1846 was the first prearranged game played between two team under the 20 rules devised by its organizer, Alexander Joy Cartwright, who umpired the game despite being a member of the Knickerbocker Club.

The infield was diamond-shaped. First and third bases were 42 paces apart. Foul lines were drawn. Pitchers threw underhanded. Batters were allowed three strikes. Best of all for baserunners, they were to be tagged or thrown out and not hit by the ball or "soaked."

Needless to say, neither the Knickerbockers nor their opponents were paid, and when the game ended, the players from both clubs retired to one of the taverns that lined the Elysian Fields for a champagne supper.

In fact, they enjoyed Cartwright's game so much that one of the original Knickerbockers, James Whyte Davis, urged "all relatives and immediate friends are well informed that I desire to be buried in my baseball suit and wrapped in the original flag of the old Knickerbockers."

So what about Abner Doubleday and Cooperstown?

Around 1907, when some unpatriotic Americans were passing around the rumor that baseball came from the old English game of rounders, the superpatriot Albert Spalding set up a commission to prove that our national pastime was indeed ours from start to finish.

The commission was getting nowhere when finally an old man came forward to testify that he was present that day in 1839 when Abner Doubleday, a student at Otsego Academy, laid out the first diamond on Farmer Finney's lot in Cooperstown and limited the number of players to nine

It was a perfect match, the all-American game of baseball and Doubleday, who later fired one of the first shots of the Civil War at Fort Sumter and was a hero of the battle of Gettysburg. The old man's story was accepted at face value, which is why the Baseball Hall of Fame is in Cooperstown today.

Unfortunately, Doubleday was a plebe at West Point in 1839 and ineligible for a home leave. He never claimed credit for inventing the game: in fact, he was never known to have mentioned it, and there is no evidence that he ever saw a baseball game.

But it was the poet Walt Whitman who predicted in 1846:

"I see great things in baseball. It's our game — the American game. It was take our people out-of-doors, fill them with oxygen, give them a larger physical stoicism, tend to relieve us from being a nervous, dyspeptic set, repair these losses, and be a blessing to us."

Of course, the poet was never a Red Sox fan.

HEALTH NOTES

Coastal research center to open in former Hagerty building

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Finally, after many years of controversy and contention, the Hagerty building at Mariner's Park is ready to take on an important role for the town as the Center for Student Coastal Research. The building has become a focus for waterfront activities for people in town of all ages. It will be used by the Cohasset Maritime Institute, enthusiastic rowers both adult and youthful who have become a force in various local competitive rowing events. A Seaside Adventures educational program for fourth, fifth and sixth graders introduces age appropriate hands-on projects in marine biology, oceanography, and environmental science.

But from a health standpoint of the Board of Health sponsors a number of programs aimed at collecting important data on our coastal water bodies. These programs represent an important assessment tool for keeping track of the condition of our coastal environment.

Here are some exciting programs offered by the Center for Student Coastal Research:

Bassings Beach Bacteria Alert — In partnership with the Board of Health, the center proposes to monitor bacteria levels on a daily basis during the summer of 2003 for the benefit of the swimming public. This study will begin this June and be used to inform the swimming public about bacteria levels in Cohasset Harbor in and around Bassings Beach. The Center for Student Coastal Research will fly a flag system that is readily observable by swimmers at Bassings Beach. We will also conduct outreach programs to make the public aware of our project and flag system. Also, the data will assist the Board of Health in meeting its overall goals of assessing the health of all water bodies in the town's watershed and in determining the town's compliance with State requirements. The data will be entered into the EPA data base.

Cohasset Harbor Salinity and Dissolved Oxygen Study — A research project implemented to study the effects of a significant increase in the wastewater treatment plant discharge into Cohasset's Inner Harbor. Cohasset lobstermen voiced concern that the increased effluent (from a 70,000 gpd capacity to a 300,000 gpd capacity) would have a detrimental impact on the health of lobsters stored in various lobster cars throughout the harbor. The study is in its second year and the collected data is analyzed and submitted to the Board of Health in the form of a formal report in the spring.

Storm Drain Mapping Project — A newly initiated project undertaken by Cohasset High School junior, Greg O'Brien. Greg's role in this project has been established through our internship program. Greg's work will assist the town in mapping location of storm drains.

Little Harbor Coliform Study — An on-going assessment of fecal coliform levels in Cohasset's Little Harbor undertaken to assist the Board of Health in its determination of water quality in Little Harbor and in its goals of meeting State requirements. This study has temporarily been suspended due the loss of laboratory access, but it will be re-instituted as soon as our lab facilities are available in the Center for Student Coastal Research.

Gulf River Study — With support from an EPA grant, and in partnership with the Gulf (River) Association, the Center has re-established water quality monitoring in the Gulf River. In this study the Center will also assist the Gulf Association in its goal of conducting a Natural Resources Inventory (NRI) of the Gulf River Watershed. Archived water quality data from 6 years ago and earlier along with this summer's data will be gathered and documented in a published report that will become part of the NRI document published by the Gulf Association.

GIS Training Program — Putting Cohasset on the Map A Training and Mentoring Project to Teach Students Geographic Information Services (GIS) Technologies Students will be trained by GIS specialists to become proficient in the application of GIS programs such that the students will be able to digitize existing town paper maps and update and improve the town's digital database used by various boards, departments, and commissions. Such work will include updating zoning layers, digitizing parcel lines on assessor's maps, and mapping storm water catch basins.

Is state shortchanging its poor school districts?

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

MICHAEL C. LEVENSON

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

John Adams, hoping to keep a fractious people united, wrote in April of 1776 that "Laws for the liberal education of youth, especially of the lower class of people, are so extremely wise and useful, that, to a humane and generous mind, no expense for this purpose would be thought extravagant."

A lofty and idealistic statement few would disagree with. And the declaration — from his Thoughts on Government — helped shape the Massachusetts Constitution.

But 227 years later, in a stuffy courtroom on the 12th floor of the McCormack Courthouse in downtown Boston, the social dream that Adams envisioned is being tested in a new era of MCAS, online learning, and line-item budgets.

Can the state afford to provide an equal and free education for all? What is fair? And what is politically viable?

Massachusetts has poured $30 billion into the public schools since passing the Education Reform Act a decade ago. MCAS graduation pass rates have reached 92 percent. Yet lawyers for students in 19 school districts told Superior Court Judge Margot Botsford — herself a former volunteer at Brookline High School — that the state is shortchanging its poor children, providing far less for urban districts than their wealthier suburban counterparts.

Photographic evidence presented at trial showed a teacher without a gymnasium who had strung a volleyball net across a school corridor. Another pushed desks together in a hallway to create a makeshift space for special needs students, and students in science class were said to learn about paramecia without microscopes.

The lawyers say these gross inequities in the public schools persist despite the centuries-old constitutional guarantee of a free and equal education for all students, regardless of income.

Already grappling with a budget shortfall, the state contends it has done its part. Noting the $30 billion, Assistant Attorney General Dierdre Roney told the court, "I think you can say from that sum that Massachusetts has done what Mr. Adams wanted…

The lawyers say these gross inequities in the public schools persist despite the centuries-old constitutional guarantee of a free and equal education for all students, regardless of income.

There's been a sustained commitment on the part of the state to increase spending, and that commitment has been sustained over 10 years, over four different administrations."

Still, what has become clear is the decade of massive expansion in public education has come to a close, just as the state celebrates the 10th anniversary of education reform. Boston sent layoff notices to 770 teachers. Although some may be rehired, it was called the biggest round of layoffs in 20 years. And news reports said Springfield laid off 185 teachers, Worcester 146, Malden 120 and Braintree 100.

A $3 billion projected deficit may be to blame. Both houses of the Legislature spent last week trying to fashion packages intended to lessen the impact of cuts in state aid for cities and towns but most mayors say the measures aren't enough. Teachers unions dropped 80,000 signed pleas for new taxes at the doorways of the Governor, House Speaker, and Senate President, but they didn't budge. Voters are averse to taxes, most say. And Gov. Mitt Romney is vowing to veto any increase.

The court will decide whether children are being left behind. But according to Michael Weisman, attorney for the Council for Fair School Finance, which has brought the suit against the state, Massachusetts is failing. "Ten years later, children are still not receiving the education that the constitution requires, and it's getting worse. The prospects for next year are even worse than the dismal performance this year."

Beyond the courtroom, there was news this week on Beacon Hill.

• Romney seeks to tap rainy day funds — The budget for fiscal year 2003 looks balanced, the Governor says, but he filed a bill last week that would allow him to tap up to $150 million out of the Rainy Day Fund as a "safety valve" just in case revenues drop in the next three weeks. Government must pay its bills, the Governor says.

• Mulligan tapped to manage trial courts — Robert Mulligan, a Superior Court judge who has spent 23 years on the bench, was tapped by Supreme Judicial Court chief Margaret Marshall to oversee the troubled trial court system, which an outside commission has said is "mired in confusion." He won praise from the Governor and other judges, but faces an uphill task restoring order and morale to the courts.

• Senate wraps up municipal relief bill — Senators went further than the House in opening the door to local taxes – but only if voters approve the hikes first. Their bill would allow cities and towns to raise restaurant meals taxes from 5 percent to anywhere from 6 percent to 8 percent. Gov. Romney has not weighed in yet, but has said generally he would back local taxes that win voter approval first.

• New environmental protection chief named — Robert W. Golledge Jr., a former DEP regional officer who has worked most recently for the consulting firm Vanasse Hangen Brustlin was named the new commissioner of the Department of Environmental Protection.

• Submachine guns make Logan debut — Submachine gun-toting State Police began patrolling the corridors of Logan Airport. The specially trained unit is the latest aggressive antiterrorism measure Massport officials have rolled out as they rebuild after Sept. 11, 2001.

• Task force recommends changes in anti-snob zoning law — The panel said communities that increase their affordable housing by .5 percent a year should be exempt from the law. The threshold now is .75 percent. Although foes said the task force didn't go far enough to protect communities from unwanted developments, Gov. Romney said the changes reshape Chapter 40B into "a tool rather than a club." Attention now turns to the Legislature.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

By Bob Katzen

beaconhill@aol.com

June 9-13

Senator Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) (617) 722-1646 Room 413F

Representative Garrett J. Bradley (D-Hingham) (617) 722-2120 Room 472

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local senators' votes on eight roll calls from the week of June 9-13. There were no roll calls in the House last week.

MUNICIPAL RELIEF PACKAGE (S 2010)

Senate 29-7, gave near final approval to a municipal relief package giving cities and towns more fiscal and management flexibility and revenue raising options in order to compensate for this year's cuts is local aid. Provisions include allowing communities, if approved by voters, to impose up to an additional three percent local meals tax; an increase in the maximum fine for parking violations and blocking intersections; increased fees for towing, fire department permits, liquor licenses and car dealership licenses; allowing local communities to exempt their overlay accounts from the allowable tax hike limits of Proposition 2 1/2; authorizing municipal treasurers to use a bi-weekly payroll system rather than a weekly one; permitting communities to offer early retirement incentive programs and to reduce the next two fiscal years' unfunded pension liability payments; and authorizing cities and towns to work with the Registry of MotorVehicles to design and sell distinctive vehicle license plates and use the profits to support local programs. Supporters said this fiscally responsible package does not raise taxes and gives local communities the necessary tools, flexibility and options to increase revenues and make up for the drastic cuts in local aid. They noted this would help prevent local cuts in education, public safety and other crucial areas. Opponents said the package is flawed and does not make up for deep local aid cuts, raises too many fees and hikes property taxes. They noted the legislature should help cities and towns by truly reforming state and local government and making them more streamlined and cost-efficient. The House approved a different version of the relief package and the Senate version now goes to the House for consideration. (A "Yea" vote is for the package. A "Nay" vote is against it). N

DISTINCTIVE LOCAL LICENSE PLATES (S 2010)

Senate 35-2, approved an amendment allowing cities and towns to work with the Registry of Motor Vehicles to design and sell distinctive vehicle license plates and use the profits to support local programs. Prior to the state printing the plate, a city or town would be required to follow the current state law regulating non-profit groups by posting a $100,000 bond and receiving a $40 check from 1500 drivers who commit to buying the plate. If fewer than 3000 plates are sold over a two-year period, the state will use a portion of the bond to recoup its cost and the remainder of the bond would be returned to the community. Amendment supporters said this is an innovative way to allow local residents to voluntarily contribute to help cities and towns make up for some of the local budget cuts. Amendment opponents said small communities cannot afford the $100,000 bond and expressed concern that the state would eventually be asked to reimburse communities that lose money on the program. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment allowing the local distinctive plates. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment). Y

HIKE HOTEL-MOTEL TAX (S 2010)

Senate 14-23, rejected an amendment allowing Boston to raise its maximum local tax on hotels, motels and bed and breakfasts from 4.5 percent to six percent and allowing all other communities to hike the tax from four percent to six percent. The increase would take effect only if approved by a city council, city council and mayor, town meeting or town council-- depending on the community's form of government. Amendment supporters said this would raise millions of dollars to help communities restore programs and noted the hike would primarily be paid by visitors from other states and nations. Amendment opponents said they oppose this local option hike unless it is subject to approval by local voters. (A "Yea" vote is for the increase in the local option hotel-motel tax. A "Nay" vote is against it). N

LOCAL MEALS TAX SUBJECT TO VOTER REFERENDUM (S 2010)

Senate 24-13, approved an amendment prohibiting the proposed up to three percent local restaurant meals tax from taking effect in a city or town unless approved by a voter referendum. Without the amendment, this local option tax would take effect if approved by a city council, city council and mayor, town meeting or town council-- depending on the community's form of government. Amendment supporters said the voters should have the power to approve or reject this new tax and noted many local restaurants would be hurt by the meals tax if neighboring communities do not impose the same tax. Amendment opponents said every issue does not have to go on the ballot and argued that local government officials, elected by the voters, should have the power to implement this tax. (A "Yea" vote is for requiring voter approval of a local meals tax. A "Nay" vote is against requiring voter approval). Y

CHANGE PROPOSITION 2 1/2 (S 2010)

Senate 17-21, rejected an amendment striking a section allowing local assessors to exempt their communities' "overlay" accounts from the allowable tax hike limits of Proposition 2 1/2. Proposition 2 1/2 is a state law that limits annual local property tax increases to 2.5 percent of the prior year's tax plus new growth unless voters override that limit on a ballot question. Overlay accounts include funds that communities are mandated to set aside for tax abatements for senior citizens, veterans, low-income residents and property owners whose properties have been overassessed. Exempting the overlay accounts means that communities can raise property taxes to fund their overlay accounts on top of raising taxes to the maximum amount allowed by Proposition 2 1/2. Amendment supporters said the amendment violates Proposition 2 1/2 and is simply a property tax hike that can be implemented by assessors and would cost taxpayers up to $160 million. They noted communities already have the ability to override Prop 2 1/2 and argued that with this new exemption, communities would be tempted to overassess more properties in order to build up the overlay fund that essentially would become a slush fund raised outside the limits of Proposition 2 1/2. Amendment opponents said this is a long overdue, minor change that would allow communities to use this new revenue to avoid layoffs and pay for important local programs and services. They noted it is unfair that a community is restricted in raising property taxes but is required to set aside a portion of its property tax revenue in an overlay account where it is not used for public services and can sit for years. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment striking the overlay exemption. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment and favors the overlay exemption). Y

ABOLISH CIVIL SERVICE FOR CITIES AND TOWNS (S 2010)

Senate 5-32, rejected an amendment abolishing civil service for all municipal employees except for police officers and firefighters. Amendment supporters said civil service is an archaic and counterproductive system that has outlived its usefulness and ties the hands of cities and towns that want to make changes and become more efficient. Amendment opponents said the amendment is a major step backwards and would completely politicize local hiring by allowing mayors and other local officials to fire hard working employees and/or eliminate their jobs. (A "Yea" vote is for abolishing local civil service. A "Nay" vote is against abolishing local civil service). N

ALLOW FOUR-DAY SCHOOL WEEK (S 2010)

Senate 1-36, rejected an amendment allowing local school committees to implement a four-day week in their schools as long as the committee submits a plan to the Board of Education detailing how required hours of instruction would be fulfilled. Amendment supporters said this may not be one of the best solutions but it will give communities a little flexibility to absorb some local aid cuts and still offer a quality education. Amendment opponents said the amendment is an outrageous one that may save a few dollars but will severely hurt the quality of public education across the state. (A "Yea" vote is for a four-day school week option. A "Nay" vote is against it). N

DRUNKEN DRIVING LAW (S 2009)

Senate 36-0, gave near final approval to a bill establishing a "per se" drunken driving law in Massachusetts. The measure makes it illegal for a motorist to drive with a blood alcohol content (BAC) of .08 percent or higher. Current law provides that a BAC of more than .08 is one piece of evidence of intoxication but leaves it up to the court to consider all evidence to determine if a driver was legally impaired. The proposal also increases the automatic license suspension period for refusal to take a Breathalyzer test from 120 days to 180 days and reduces the period from 90 days to 30 days if a driver takes the test and fails. Supporters said Massachusetts is the only state without a per se law and noted it is time to strengthen drunken driving laws because almost half of the state's 477 traffic deaths in 2001 were alcohol-related. They argued that the change in license suspension periods would increase the incentive for motorists to take the Breathalyzer test. Some pointed out that the state has already forfeited some $11 million in federal funds by not having a per se law and will lose millions more unless the law is signed into law by June 30. The House approved a different version of the bill and the Senate version now goes to the House for consideration. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill). Y

Deer Hill girls' effort is sew nice

Benefits kids with cancer

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Fifth graders Emmi St. John and Betsy Crawford have high expectations for this summer vacation. Not only will they attend camp and enjoy the beach, they will also be working hard to brighten the rooms and spirits of children suffering from cancer in the hospital.

The two 11-year-old Deer Hill students have been sewing colorful, patterned pillowcases in their spare time, to provide a cheery alternative to the otherwise colorless white hospital sheets that children who frequent the hospital have become accustomed to.

After reading a book about the life of a young girl diagnosed with cancer, Emmi began to empathize with children who are battling the disease and wanted to find some way to help the cause. After receiving a sewing machine for Christmas, she was very excited about the prospect of making something special for the patients. Together with Betsy, who has also been sewing since age eight, they decided pillowcases would be the perfect craft.

"I love to sew," said Emmi. "I thought I'd do something I love, with one of my best friends."

Initially, the students came to Deer Hill guidance counselor Betsy McGrath with the idea of making pillows for patients. McGrath thought the idea was wonderful, but not easily transported and more of a challenge. She suggested pillowcases to the girls, who immediately loved the idea. McGrath then turned to counseling intern, Jen Sargent-Tracy, to provide guidance and support to the girls as they began their endeavor.

"We wanted to do it on our own," said Betsy. But the girls appreciate the help given by Sargent-Tracy whose sewing group donated some of the fabric to help get them started.

Through messages in the school's newsletter and posters in the teachers' room and cafeteria, the girls have received fabric donations, which have made 23 pillowcases possible to date. Their goal is 100, making four separate trips of 25 pillowcases each to Children's Hospital in Boston over the course of the summer. On average, Betsy said the pillowcases take between 10 and 20 minutes to sew, including decorative rickrack. They hope to finish two more this week, to bring to the hospital Thursday, after their last day of school.

Because the children receiving the pillowcases have weakened immune systems from treatment, the girls won't be able to meet them or see their faces when they get their gift. "We hope they're going to be happy," said Emmi. "It'll be more comfortable for them," said Betsy.

The girls also have some help from non-sewing friends who wanted to become involved. Thomson Jaffe and Leigh Collins will be making 25 cards with happy poems inside, one to be placed inside each pillowcase to be donated. While the cards might not make it into the first delivery of 25, they will be included with the second.

McGrath couldn't be more proud of the girls. "They're two little sweethearts," she said. "We need more of them."

The girls feel a great sense of pride as well, knowing they are able to make a difference in the lives of children their own age, while setting a good example by encouraging others to volunteer. Emmi has enjoyed every minute of their efforts, especially being able to spend time with her friend outside of school. "You get a wonderful feeling when you tie something you love with helping others and working with your friends. It's awesome," she said.

Defense, hitting need to improve for CHS baseball team to make playoff run in '04

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Al Gallotta realizes this season was considered a big step in the right direction for the Cohasset High baseball.

Is he pleased by this? Yes.

Is he satisfied? Hardly.

"I see this as a case where you can look at the glass as being half full or half empty," explained Gallotta, looking back on his first season at the helm of the Skippers ship that saw a three win improvement over last year's 4-14 team. "People are telling me how nice a season this was for the program, and that's great. I also enjoyed working with the kids. They were great.

"But, personally, my level of expectation was higher than this. Our pitching wasn't bad on the whole, but our defense really wasn't that good, and our hitting really dropped over the second half of the season. You can't win in baseball clicking in just one of these three important areas."

The Skippers started and ended the season on a strong note, but really struggled in between, losing all but one in a 12-game stretch before ending the season with consecutive wins.

"We had five or six guys hitting over .300 over the first six or seven games, and then reality seemed to set in," said Gallotta, who previously coached baseball for 27 years at Archbishop Williams, serving as that school's Athletic Director for 25 of those.

"We didn't face as many tough teams and top pitchers in the early part of our schedule. And then I think we saw a lot of really good pitchers once we got into our league play."

The team batting average wound up being .217, senior centerfielder Chris McKenna leading the way with a .302 average.

Junior shortstop Mike Dooley was a rarity on this team. He started the year slowly at the plate, but came on strong at the end, finishing second to McKenna in the team batting race. Sophomore Ted Straughn (.283), senior Mike Snowdale and sophomore catcher Louis Blanco were the only other Cohasset hitters to finish on the right side of .200.

McKenna and Snowdale, the team's lone South Shore League all-star, are two of five seniors Gallotta will lose to graduation. The others are first baseman Trey Curry, catcher/outfielder Matt O'Brien and utility man Cosimo Cambi.

"I had a good group of kids this year, and that started with the seniors," said Gallotta. "They'll all be missed."

On the whole, though, the loss to the caps and gowns will not be near as severe as that being felt buy most of the other teams in the SSL. Straughn, Dooley, Blanco and juniors John Andrade and John Downing all return to key varsity positions, and there appear several strong candidates to make the jump from this year's 9-6 JV team, the first plus-.500 baseball team at CHS in recent memory.

If not for bad luck

Post 118 legion squad loses two more close ones

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The bad news is the Cohasset Post 118 Legion team has not yet won a game in four attempts. The good news is they appear to be running out of new and creative ways to lose.

The Post 118ers dropped a pair of 3-2 decisions over the last week to go to 0-4 on the season. Chris Carr and Greg Malley both looked extremely good on the mound in going the distance against Canton and Quincy, respectively.

And it wasn't like the offense was laying down. Several golden scoring opportunities were created over the course of the two one-run setbacks. It was just the lack of that one big hit that continued to plague the Post 118ers. Five times in the two losses the locals loaded the bases in innings and came away with nothing to show for their troubles on the scoreboard.

"If it wasn't for bad luck, we wouldn't have any luck right now," bemoaned veteran Post 118 coach Scott Arnold. "We've got guys hitting the ball hard right now, but its right at people. Our pitching has been very good, and we've gotten some sensational defense too. It's just that when we make an error, it always seems to cost us."

None of the runs against Carr in Monday's 3-2 loss on the road to Quincy were earned.

Lax seniors established new levels of excellence

By David Ingber

Every so often in high school sports, a class contains so much talent in a given sport that fans just cannot wait until their senior year. The 2003 graduate members of this years boys lacrosse team not only led their team to yet another appearance in the South Sectional semi-final, they, over their four years on the varsity squad, created a program that is now one of the most feared in the state.

"You've established this program's reputation," said coach Kevin Orcutt, after the team's 11-6 home loss to

Clark comes through again

2nd annual Clark Chatteron Fund Run raises $5,000 for Cohasset youth sports

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

When Deb Beal awoke this past Saturday morning to the sounds of rain drops against her window panes, she did something she hasn't done in quite a while: she talked to Clark Chatterton.

"I said 'Clark, I don't know who you have to talk to up there or what kind of pull you have, but shut this stuff off now,'" recalled Deb with a grin. "I was really nervous because we only had 79 pre-registered runners, which was down from last year, and I was thinking we were in big trouble if it kept raining. Who'd show up?"

Well, as Clark did so many times during his "living years," he came through like a champ. By the time Deb pulled into the parking lot at the Music Circus, the rain had stopped and the clouds were drifting off to sea. And, lo and behold, it turned into a near perfect day for the second annual Clark Chatterton Fund Run.

"The sun came out, and it got warm, but it wasn't even humid, which was kind of surprising after the rain," said Beal, who organized the race named in honor of her dear departed former boss and friend. "Clark came thorough."

Chatterton, the former longtime Athletic Director at Cohasset High, succumbed to cancer in the summer of 2000. All proceeds from the race in his name benefit youth sports organizations in town.

Over 100 runners registered on race day morning, bringing the total to 186 runners, 135 of whom ran and completed the scenic 3.5-mile course that ran though Cohasset Common and past Sandy Beach.

Cohasset's own Mike Kearney won the race, covering the course in 20:57 to finish comfortably ahead of Scituate High track standout Brian Stewart (21:17). Stewart's SHS teammate, Thomas Pollard, was just four seconds in back of that (21:21) and well known local road race figure Ted Coyle, also of Scituate, was fourth with his

Athletic activity fees on the rise

Prop 2-1/2 mandates, state funding cutbacks usher in hard fiscal reality

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

It's a hard fiscal reality: the public can no longer support extracurricular activities.

Proposition 2-1/2 mandates and state funding cutbacks have simply made it impossible for public school departments to keep up with rising costs and the demand for more services.

Several schools in the South Shore area have, subsequently, been forced to institute activity/user fees in the last couple of years, a few of which are already into their second or third increase.

Of the 12 public high schools in Community Newspaper Company/South coverage area, three (Braintree, Abington and Rockland High Schools) are implementing new athletic user fees next school year, two more (Holbrook and Weymouth) are proposing this and two others (Norwell and Silver Lake) will increase their fees.

Braintree High dropped extracurricular fees in the late '90s, but the School Committee recently voted to approve an all-encompassing one time "activity fee" of $100 per student, with a family cap of $250. This fee will cover all extracurricular activities for the school year, athletic and otherwise.

Though this might sound like a lot to some families, it is a far cry from what BHS Athletic Director Frank Tricomi feels is needed to support the current activity agenda for the school. His athletic budget for this school year will finish with an estimated deficit of $89,000, and, he notes somberly, costs are only going to go up next year.

Tricomi does not feel the one-time $100 fee from students, which will be split between several activities (both athletic and non-athletic), will make much of a dent in this kind of deficit.

"I think back to when my daughter went to school," offered Tricomi. "She was doing three sports, National Honor Society, orchestra and a few other things. So that's $100 split between say seven activities. That's not going to help make up much of our shortfall."

Tricomi estimates it costs $400 just to outfit each athlete who plays football, between pads, helmet and uniform. Throw in on top of that coaches' salaries, referee fees and travel costs.

Now, football is by far the most expensive athletic activity, but the other sports have the same kinds of associated expenses. For the most part, ticket sales and booster drives offset only a portion of these financial obligations.

This is precisely why Tricomi originally proposed to the School Committee a plan for separate athletic fees: $250 for one sport, $475 for two and $600 for three. When it became apparent that this one had no chance of flying, he knocked his request down to $100 per sport, but that did not float either.

The result is that BHS athletic officials, like so many of their counterparts, are left searching for creative ways to tighten up their spending.

"We'll cut down on equipment purchases for starters," reported Tricomi. "It won't be anything safety related, obviously. There'll be a few less basketballs, a few less footballs. That kind of thing. There are also a number of other proposals out there right now to save some money."

Among these "proposals" is:

- Increasing the admission prices for school events for students from $2 to $3;
- Tightening things up on buses when different teams are heading to locations in close proximity;
- Athletes buying their own uniforms;
- Eliminating non-league freshman games.

Scituate High School appears to be in better shape than most South Shore area schools at the moment. Officials increased that school's annual student activity fee from $50 to $100 prior to this current school year, and there is no talk of increasing at this time, according to Athletic Director Kathleen McCarthy. This fee covers up to 10 extracurricular activities for the school year, both athletic and non-athletic, as well as the town's bus fee and a discount on admission to all school events.

"It looks like we're in pretty good shape right now," noted McCarthy.

The third-year A.D. feels that SHS benefits from a high student involvement rate in extracurriculars. This year, 475 of the school's 780 students, or roughly 61 percent, paid the $100 fee.

McCarthy does, though, see a very real likelihood of dramatic increases in activity fees in the not too distant future.

"Right now, no one really knows what kind of money is coming from the state," noted McCarthy, referring to local aid prospects. "Things are a lot better right now for the Scituate schools than they were a year ago, but there's other schools where teachers are seeing pink slips right now. That's scary.

"In my opinion, I think you could see the user fees start going up a lot in the next few years, and sooner than that for a lot of towns."

Abington would be one of those "sooner towns," its school committee voting recently to go from no activities fee to a one-time fee of $150 next school year.

"Given our budget reality, this was really the only alternative we had," asserted Abington A.D. Jeff Kent. "We're in pretty dire straits. We increased ticket prices by a dollar last year, and that helped a little, but we needed a lot more, and this seemed the only logical step."

Back in the early '80s, shortly after Proposition 2-1/2 was ratified, AHS instituted a $50 athletic activity fee. Fortunately, the school booster organization soon swooped in and not only eliminated the need for those fees, but saved a few varsity programs. With fiscal times on the upswing a few years after that, the school department was able to re-absorb the extracurricular budgets, leaving the boosters free to pick and choose various school improvement projects. What is happening now financially, however, is well beyond the means of both the boosters and school department.

The school committee has already approved for next year the elimination of the one funded junior high athletic program (basketball), as well as all of the freshman athletic programs at the high school, and that was after the activity fee was approved.

Abington boasted an impressive 50 percent athletic participation rate among its student body this school year, according to Kent. The longtime A.D. expresses hopes that figure will not wane as a result of the user fee.

"We certainly don't want to see anyone stop playing sports or being involved because of this," said Kent. "If there's anyone who can't afford it, they can discretely apply for a waiver and we'll handle that. We'll just have to wait to see what happens, though."

Cohasset, with a student body of just over 350, has had a long standing $75 per sport activity fee, with a cap of $200 per student-athlete.

With approximately 80 percent of the students in grades 9-12 involved in one sport and more than 50 percent in two sports or more, this arrangement seems to cover an acceptable percentage of the athletic operating budget. In other words, there is no move to increase the fee. CHS also has a waiver process.

The Hanover School Committee, in an effort to level the playing field, so to speak, has been charging student athletes $100 to participate in the two most expensive sports, hockey and football, but only $50 per for all other sports. However, there has been talk recently of going to an annual fee, it having been noted that this tends to increase overall athletic involvement.

"Once the fee has been paid, kids are looking to take advantage of that," said first-year Hanover High Athletic Director Fran Coyle. "I know they've found at schools like Scituate and Norwell that the spring enrollment has gone up with the one-time fees."

One town in the South Shore area appears to be immune from the ravages of this harsh financial climate. Marshfield High has no athletic or activity fees, nor does it seem likely there will be anytime soon.

This, of course, has much to do with the town having had both the ability and forethought to squirrel away a total of $10 million in recent years during more prosperous times. The town voted to dip into those coffers for $2.9 million this year to fund an across the board 4.5 percent raise for town employees, but virtually everything else on the town budget has been level funded for next year.

"I think this is a testament to how well our town has handles its money," noted Marshfield High Athletic Director Glenn Ward. "We haven't had to cut any programs. We've spent the money prudently, as we'll hopefully continue to do, and hopefully that will carry us through this latest crunch."

Holbrook High has also been able to avoid going the user fee route up until now, but that town's coffers are running dry, leading HHS Athletic Director Brian Snook toward the same inevitable conclusion so many of his counterparts have already faced.

"Looking at the financial numbers, it looks like something is going to have to give for us next year if we're going to keep all the programs," conceded Snook, who oversees the smallest athletic department in the area, HHS offering only 10 varsity sports, two of which (football and hockey) are cooperative arrangements with Avon.

As of presstime, Snook was still uncertain about what that "something" would be, as his athletic budget for 2003-'04 had still not been finalized. Also complicating matters is talk of forming cooperative athletic programs with Blue Hills, specifically wrestling and track/cross country. The School Committee has floated the idea of an annual $100 athletic activity fee, but substantive discussions have yet to take place.

Fortunately, most of our schools will agree to waive or decrease the fee for families who have trouble making the payment.

"We want kids to keep playing sports; that's the bottom line," said Hanover's Coyle. "We had the fees before, after Prop 2-1/2, and then dropped them when things improved. If things improve again, hopefully we'll be able to drop the user fee. We just want to keep the kids playing sports and staying involved."

area the Skippers appear to be strong in for 2004.

Straughn was the staff ace from day one. The fireballing righty struck out 60 hitters through 40-2/3 innings and had an ERA of 3.36. Inconsistency of control was a problem for Ted, as was reflected by his 48 walks.

"Ted has the potential to be a very good pitcher; he just needs to throw strikes more consistently," said Gallotta. "But he was just a sophomore this year. There's reason to believe he'll get better."

Downing finished second on the team in innings pitched. He was particularly effective in the early going, mixing a good breaking pitch with very good control. He struggled a bit down the stretch, but, as with Straughn, it is expected he'll only improve."

Gallotta might have discovered a couple of new pitchers in the final two games. In a 3-2 win over Holbrook on May 22, freshman Chris Bryan threw a complete game two-hitter, striking out eight to earn the win.

"Chris has some definite ability," said Gallotta. "I can see him starting with the varsity team next year, and he could elevate to the number two (pitcher). I'm definitely encouraged knowing I've got him for three more years."

Dooley took to the mound for his first varsity start in the regular season finale 24 hours later at Millis, and he too wound up going the distance to lead the way to an 8-4 win, striking out five while scattering six hits.

"I probably should have started using Mike earlier as a pitcher, but I really didn't want to take him out of the field," said Gallotta. "He played a pretty good shortstop for us this year, and that's such a vital position. You don't like to mess with it."

As it turned out, Andrade was able to make the transition pretty well from second base to shortstop, and sophomore Tim Pilczak played a pretty good second base.

Of course, this was one of the many matters Gallotta might have been able to address in the preseason had it not been for a historical stretch of poor weather.

Rain forced the CHS baseball team indoors for virtually the entire three weeks the team had to get ready for the season opener. Then the postponements began to pile up, and the ensuing make-ups cut into the practice time Gallota would have had later in the season.

"Honestly, I did find it very difficult early on, not being able to get on the field," he conceded. "There's only so much you can do indoors. I think that set the team back, and I know it set me back. I was trying to get kids into positions, and I was really operating in the dark in some ways."

Fortunately, things can only get better on that front next spring.

"Now I know the kids and they know me, and that's a big plus," Gallotta continued. "It was a learning experience for me, and I'll be better next year. I'll be able to concentrate more on individual areas than team areas."

One of those areas will most certainly be hitting. Gallotta has long prided himself in being able to help players in that particular aspect of the game, and he looks forward to the challenge of putting that skill to greater use next season.

Team's dream comes true

ished her brilliant career as a singles player with a dominating performance, a 6-0, 6-0 second singles win that gave Cohasset its first team point. Grossman utilized a masterful backhand with great consistency to beat Tantasqua senior Sarah Glover in a remarkably quick match.

Grossman had lost in the State semis, with Manchester's number two topping her in straight sets. This win was a touch of redemption for a Grossman, absolutely the perfect way to finish off her high school athletic experience before attempting to walk-on to the Div. I Colgate University team next year.

"I was just out there taking every point," said Grossman, who admitted that she played much better in the State finals than in the semis. "I wasn't holding anything back."

Third singles junior Holly Graham took her point with great ease, winning 6-2, 6-0 just minutes after Grossman had finished. Just five minutes later, the junior second doubles team of Emilie Sullivan and Corey Evans won 6-1, 6-1 to finalize the team victory before first singles sophomore Liz Stone had even finished her first set.

Stone, a superb 16-2 (4-2 playoffs) this year despite a nagging ankle injury, played through pain against senior Morgan Reynolds, the 16th best under-18 tennis player in USTA New England. The two split sets, 5-7, 6-2, but with the team match already decided, Reynolds won in an extended tiebreaker 10-8.

The first doubles team of senior Julie Shea and Courtney Caron lost a tough season-ender in three sets, 6-4, 3-6, 4-6.

Although a 3-2 score nearly always suggests a very tightly contested match, it was amazing to watch the Cohasset team defeat the second-best team in the state with such a high level of cool and poise. The team has great depth and experience, and it definitely showed, with every Cohasset player not letting nerves get the better of them on the biggest stage of their tennis lives.

"[A moment like] this may never happen again to them the rest of their lives," said an elated Kathy Prevett, in her second year as the assistant coach of the team. "They were so mentally ready for this match."

The Cohasset girls team ended their season 22-0, winning the South Shore League title, the South Sectional title, and finally the State title. There is no question they did Mr. Chatterton proud.

Cohasset youth girls lacrosse report

Youth lax girls finish with wins over Scituate and competitive Family Day

The Cohasset girls youth lacrosse program finished its season in style, with convincing mid- week wins over Scituate and rousing competition at Family Day.

The final games against out-of-town competition were played June 11, and started with a combined Cohasset 12-and-Under squad running out to an 8-1 halftime lead against Scituate and coasting to a 13-6 final.

Gabriella Flibotte scored three goals and added and assist to lead the way, but it was a balanced Cohasset attack that also saw two goals from Amy Meikleham and one each from Hannah Burgess, Jennifer Cahill, Lindsay Hill, Isabelle Franklin, Sophie Bertolami, Madeline Leahy, Lindsay Allard and Maddy Altholtz added solo scores. For Burgess, Cahill and Altholtz, the goals were their first of the season.

Thomson Jaffe stopped eight Scituate shots, most in the first half to allow Cohasset to break out.

The 14-and-Under girls also combined to play Scituate, and ran away to an 11-7 game that was more lopsided than the final score would suggest. Charlotte and Elizabeth Landon combined for three goals and an assist to lead the way, Gabriella Flibotte added a hat trick and Kristen Dooley scored twice, with McKenna Teague, Lindsay Durkin and Colleen Richardson scoring solo goals. For Richardson, a stalwart defensive player all season long, it was her first goal of the season.

Kara Wilcox, Madeline Leahy and Durkin picked up assists during the game

Aisling Guinee made 9 saves in the Cohasset net.

Family Day action on June 15 saw the first scrimmage for the Cohasset 10-and-Under girls, who played in a clinic all season, rather than as a team playing against other towns.

Divided into Blue and White squads for a 30-minute full-field scrimmage without goalies, the girls staged a spirited back-and-forth contest.

The White team jumped out to a 3-0 lead behind two goals from Kathleen Kelly sandwich around a score by Kaci Kucinski. Kucinski and Vicky Wade notched assists on Kelley's goals.

Blue got right back into the game and tied the score at 3 on the strength of two Whitney Jaffe goals sandwiched around a score from Allison Bookstein. Caroline Fein got credit for assists on two of those goals.

White roared back behind scores from Vicky Wade and Abby Brown, and while Jaffe completed a hat trick, Blue was unable to hit the twine again and the game ended 5-4, White.

Jessica Fusco and Dylanne Axelson came up particularly strong for the Blue defense, while Merrick Sease and Alexandra Bowman picked up a number of key ground balls for the White team.

The Blue and White 12-U squads faced off next, with the Blue team being the last obstacle in an unbeaten season for the white team.

White scored the first five goals of the game to establish its dominance. Caitlin Mahoney and Gabriella Flibotte each scored twice, with Madeline Leahy and Amy Meikleham contributing solo scores as White raced to a 6-1 lead. Lindsay Hill's goal was the Blue team's only score.

In the second half, Hill's second goal had Blue thinking comeback, but two Leahy scores and two more from Mahoney put the game out of reach. A Maura Barnes goal for Blue made the final score 10-3 in favor of the White team.

Thomson Jaffe and Abby Faulkner each played a half in the nets for both teams, with Jaffe finishing the game with 10 stops and Faulkner 4.

Next, it was the 14-and-Under teams, both of which had gone through the season unbeaten, with a combined record of 10-0-1 entering Sunday's contest.

The early part of the game saw the two teams trading goals, with Kara Wilcox converting an Alyssa Campbell feed for the Blue, answered by a Gabriella Flibotte goal. Lindsay Durkin's score for Blue was answered by Caren Garber for the White. But Durkin scored her second and set up a Haley Haracz score, and Wilcox fed Charlotte Landon for a goal as Blue finally took command 5-2. An Amy Meikleham goal brought the score to 5-3 at the half.

Durkin opened the second half scoring, before White threatened a comeback behind a Megan Sacks solo score and a Sacks-to-Flibotte scoring run. Haracz, Wilcox and Campbell answered for Blue, and while Flibotte and Sacks both scored once more, White ran out of time and the score ended 9-7 in favor of the Blue team.

Aisling Guinee and Thomson Jaffe split the netminding duties, playing a half with each team. Guinee finished with 8 saves, Jaffe with 6.

Here are the final season statistics for the 12-and-Under girls:

Gabriella Flibotte, 34 goals, 2 assists, 36 points; Lindsey Hill, 14-3-17; Maura Barnes, 13-3-16; Caitlin Mahoney, 8-5-13; Isabelle Franklin, 11-1-12; Katelyn Ryan, 9-0-9; Katie Gaumer, 7-2-9; Lindsey Allard, 6-1-7; Amy Meikleham, 6-0-6; Madeline Leahy, 5-0-5; Sophie Bertolami, 2-0-2; Caroline Saltonstall, 2-0-2; Maddy Altholtz, 1-1-2; Paige Smith, 1-0-1; McKenna Teague, 1-0-1; Abby Faulkner, 0-1-1; Polly Murray, 1-0-1; Johanna Regan, 1-0-1; Leigh Collins, 1-0-1; Hannah Burgess, 1-0-1; Jennifer Cahill, 1-0-1; Olivia Sullivan, 1-0-1.

On the season, Thomson Jaffe stopped 77 shots and gave up 56 goals for a .579 save percentage. Abby Faulkner, who gamely stepped into the goal with very limited training time, made 12 saves and surrendered 19 goals in limited action.

At the 14-and-Under level, the final girls stats are:

Lindsey Durkin, 18 goals, 3 assists, 21 points; Gabriella Flibotte, 20-0-20; Kaleigh Swain, 15- 2-17; Megan Sacks, 11-2-13; Mary Previte, 12-1-13; Haley Haracz, 11-0-11; Kristen Dooley, 11- 0-11; Kara Wilcox, 8-3-11; McKenna Teague, 7-2-9; Charlotte Landon, 5-1-6; Caren Garber, 4- 0-4; Maura Barnes, 2-2-4; Elizabeth Landon, 2-1-3; Alyssa Campbell, 2-1-3; Katelyn Ryan 2-0- 2; Amy Meikleham, 2-0-2; Emily Coggins, 1-0-1; Sarah Bookstein, 1-0-1; Paige Strecker, 1-0-1; Isabelle Franklin, 1-0-1; Colleen Richardson, 1-0-1; Kenzie Durkin, 1-0-1; Sara Brown, 1-0-1; Tessa Leahy, 1-0-1; Madeline Leahy, 0-1-1.

Aisling Guinee did the bulk of the goaltending for both teams, and racked up 55 saves while surrendering 40 goals for a .579 save percentage.

time of 21:29.

The top female finisher was Hingham's Jennifer Fay, who took ninth overall with her run of 22:13, more than two minutes ahead of Cohasset's Barbara Buckley, who took 20th overall with her finish of 24:15. Angela Iaria, of Boston, was the third female to cross (33rd, 25:45), as she just managed to hold off Cohasset High track star Nicole Whitney (25:51) in the race for third place.

The real winners of the race, though, were a variety of youth sports undertakings in Cohasset. Beal reports approximately $5,000 was raised by the 5K race and another $800 by the Kids IK "fun run".

The race began and ended at the Music Circus on Sohier Street, and took runners by Cohasset Common, past Sandy Beach, up Nichols Road and then by the Chatterton house before looping back toward the Music Circus finish line.

This year's race was run the reverse of last year's course, as Beal and her fellow coordinators felt the visual effect off a large clump of runners passing through Cohasset Center together at the beginning of the race would be quite impressive.

Beal is hoping the race will continue to grow in its third year, eyeing a figure of 220 runners as the optimum field for this event.

"I think that would be right about the right number for this course we have," noted Beal, herself a veteran of the road race scene. "That's the goal for now."

That and keeping the spirit of a great friend and boss alive.

Ipswich last week, "and that's a legacy to be proud of."

The eight seniors on the team accounted for 134 of the team's 218 goals in this year's 16-1 squad, as the team set a school record by winning 16 in a row this season. Not only that, but they were the driving class behind the appearances in the State finals on the 2001 team and the State semi-final showdown in '02.

Curt Kahn, also a valued member of the varsity soccer team in the fall the last few years, has been the leading scorer on a high-flying striker squad that is consistently at the top of the conference offensively. With his trademark ability to dance around bigger and faster players, and the rare field vision for finding tiny holes to open up teammates, Kahn registered 52 goals and 32 assists.

A tremendous asset to the playoff teams of hockey and football the last few years, Tom Anderson helped anchor the team with solid, hard-nosed play, tallying 25 goals and 19 assists. Whether it was punting, receiving, skating, checking, or netting a lax-goal, he was the sort of versatile athlete any coach would want on his field.

Matt Davis, who walked onto the football team his senior year and made an immediate impact, and has made the SSL hockey all-star team the last three years, was leading the team in scoring with 20 goals and 13 assists when an unfortunate collar bone injury sidelined him the rest of the year. Still, he was a motivating factor from the bench, a consummate captain who stayed with his team the whole way through the season.

Robert Hickey played the role of a skillful bruiser on the midfield line, always seeming to have the edge in the brutal game facet known as the face-off. His talent in burying his shoulder into his opponent to gain ground translated well into a very tough all-around game. Also a terrific soccer player, Hickey tallied 29 points, a very high number for a defensive-minded middie.

Evan Pestone, a leader on the soccer field with the ability to score from either side, had the athleticism to play virtually any position on the field. Although his scoring numbers were down this year, he became a leader on the lacrosse field with good footwork and point guard-like passing.

Nick Spirito relished his role as the fearsome defender, a very strong and fast player with job of slowing the opposing team's top scorer. Although his on-field attitude is one of excitement and anger to help rev up his teammates, Spirito does have a 2002 Sportsmanship Award with his name on it.

John Durkin, a wide receiver on the football team and wing on the hockey team, utilizes speed equal or above anyone else on the field/ice. This speed on the lacrosse field allowed him to weave through defenders better than almost anyone, leading to his third best on the team 29 goals to go with 13 assists.

Ben Lynner, like Durkin, had virtually the same role on all three teams he excelled on in his time at Cohasset High School: use his big yet quick frame to find openings. He was arguably the best run-blocker, if not the best defensive player, on the football team, the low-post presence the basketball team so desperately needed, and the lacrosse defenseman that worked in tandem with Spirito to keep lots of unneeded pressure off junior goalie Nick Murphy.

Losing a class of this talent and ability is the inevitable bummer of high school sports. And while every senior misses his/her sport after graduation, not many can claim the same impact on their high school sport as these men have.

Next year's team will have another championship caliber edition of boys lax, and most of that is due to the hard work and effort of these eight athletes. Because of the tradition of excellence the class of 2003 started, the 2004 edition will no doubt be striving all season to preserve the legacy.

If not for bad luck

single for the heosts after Post 118 errors had extended the innings. Williams would also score on a wild pitch.

Shortstop Mike Gulinello and Alex Knight had one out singles to open the top of the seventh, and Eric Dmohowski followed with a sacrifice fly to cut Post 118's deficit to one, but Quincy hurler Pat Feeney (complete game, seven strikeouts, four hits) buckled down there to get the last out and earn the win.

Nally, a sophomore newcomer from Thayer Academy, really opened Coach Arnold's eyes with his strong mound performance on Wednesday to a tough Canton team, made up predominantly of players from this spring's Div. 2 south sectional finalist Canton High team.

Arnold has been trying to figure out his pitching rotation, having used four different starters (Mike Barry, Dmohowski, Carr and Nally) through Monday, but said that Nally has definitely earned himself at least one more start.

"It looks like Greg is the real deal," lauded Arnold. "He's young, but he's got a great arm, and it looks like he knows what he's doing out there."

Arnold also lauded the work of the defense overall, and shortstop Gulinello in particular.

"Mike has made the move from third base, and that's not exactly an easy move, but he's been doing a phenomenal job for us," praised the 10th year head coach.

The Post 118 squad was scheduled to get back into action this past Tuesday and Wednesday against perennial Zone power West Roxbury and Morrisette, respectively, both games on the road. The next game is tonight's hosting of Weymouth at Scituate High (5:45).

The post 118ers will be back on the road Sunday at Stoughton and then return home Monday night to host Braintree, looking to avenge an early season 6-3 loss that went down to the wire. Both games start at 5:45 p.m..

"The kids will be up for that one," promised Arnold of the Braintree rematch. "We've come close without winning against Braintree a few times now in the last few years, and the kids are hungry to get that monkey of their backs."

IT'S HAPPENING

Band concerts

During the past 11 seasons, concert funding has been provided through the generosity of the South Shore Playhouse Associates, Inc.

Each June the Board of Directors of the South Shore Music Circus takes under consideration the request of the Recreation Commission, for concert funding, hence, certainty of concert are not absolute until mid-June, each season. The SSMC donations are matched by a grant from the American federation of Musicians, N.Y.C.

Based upon continued SSMC funding, the schedule for the 2003 season is as follows:

Tuesday, July 1, 7:30 p.m. Town Common

Tuesday, July 15, 7:30 p.m. Town Common

Performances will be by the 30-piece South Shore Concert Band under the direction of Mr. Richard P. Whitmarsh. Concerts are held on the Cohasset Common, free of charge and the public is cordially invited. It is a good idea to bring either lawn chairs or blankets to sit on, and from time to time, insect repellent is a good item to have available. You may call the Recreation office at 383-4109 to check on the status of concerts should you be in doubt as to weather conditions.

Register for the Music Circus

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct a Music Circus Registration for "Callou's Big Party" on Tuesday, June 24 from 9 a.m. to noon and again from 5-7 p.m. at the recreation office at town hall.

Music Circus registrations for children involved in The Playground Program are held every Tuesday at the recreation office from 9 a.m. to noon and from 5-7 p.m. for the remaining performance.

"Callou's Big Party" will be held at the Music Circus on July 10. Children will be walked down from the Playground with their counselors.

Our World Children's Museum Walk-a-Thon

Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum invites families to participate Saturday in a walk-a-thon and a morning of games to celebrate the completion of Phase I construction.

The museum site is at 100 Sohier St. at the back of the new Paul Pratt Library. Registration for the 9 a.m. walkathon will begin at 8:30 a.m. Saturday at the site.

Participants will get a T-shirt, take a walk together around the common and village and return for a tour of the museum space and a morning of games and refreshments. Besides the games, there will be a climbing wall and a fire engine to explore. The cost is $10 for adults; $5 for kids.

While the second floor exhibits will not be completed until the fall of 2004, there will be programming for children on the museum's first floor beginning this fall. A free playground is also in the planning and fundraising stage.

Sun shines on Festival

she thinks this speaks very highly of Cohasset's festival.

The Art Center has received about 40 phone calls from people who attended the fair, who wanted more information on how to get in contact with the companies they liked. "If people go away and are still thinking about what they saw, it says a lot," Kennedy said.

Not only did the vendors have success at the Festival, the adjoining Lobster Roll sale and Strawberry Festival were successful as well.

Through the efforts of Lucia Woods, Ann Stenbeck, Amy Leger and numerous willing and enthusiastic helpers, the First Parish Church by far exceeded its expectation of selling 300 rolls, with a grand total of roughly 700.

"It went very, very well for us," said Woods. "We thought it was a great success and we had a marvelous crew."

Woods went on to say that the church has received positive feedback and is certainly planning on holding the festival again next year. "We had a wonderful time," she said.

Annette Sawchuk said the Strawberry Festival was also a big hit, selling out completely by 3:00 Sunday. The church had sliced 525 quarts of berries for the shortcakes. Sawchuk said every year, "there are so many people who come," and notes the weather may have helped bring people out.

The Art Exhibits were also a success with various paintings, photos and even quilts. A very interesting piece in the children's display was a giant candy bar sculpture, with its wrapper undone and a bite taken out of it.

For those who may not have had a chance to purchase a particular craft, Kennedy said the Art Center keeps in contact with the vendors and will be holding a Holiday Marketplace at the Art Center for one day in November to feature what seem to be the most popular 15-20 vendors. For many, this will provide a wonderful opportunity to do some Christmas shopping for unique gifts.

Overall, Kennedy said the Festival was "very, very successful," which makes the exhaustion she feels afterward all worth while.

"It's a great event for so many different reasons," she said, noting how much she enjoys being part of what has become a well-known tradition. While it Kennedy said it changes slightly from year to year, everyone continually works hard to ensure there is always something for everyone.

Organic farm perennially popular for kids with green thumbs

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

There are kids that love sports, kids that love theater, kids that love music, and kids that love art, science, horses and dance. And in the summer, there are generally plenty of camps and activities for them.

But what about the kid that loves to be out in the garden, getting their hands dirty, growing things? For the teen and pre-teen who has moved beyond the garden plot in the backyard, there is a p they can spend part of the summer learning about and growing organic food.

The Young Farmers program at Holly Hill Farm in Cohasset is a summer work and camp experience for young people entering grades 7 through 9.

The farm, at 236 Jerusalem Road, grows certified organic vegetables, herbs, flowers and seedlings for sale at a seasonal farm stand and at the Cohasset Farmers Market. Owned for five generations by the White family, Holly Hill Farm has had various incarnations, but is currently operating as an organic vegetable farm.

Farm Manager Kate Sullivan said that Holly Hill began the camp program partly because of a need within the adolescent age group for exposure to farms, growing things and gardening.

"We had been running education programs for a long time and we have always done a lot with elementary age and high school age children. But one age group that we had not seen a lot of is the young teens. It's a tough age for a summer experience, because they're too young for a real job but too old, in a lot of cases, for a traditional camp," she said.

At Holly Hill's Young Farmer program, teens and pre-teens going into grades 7 through 9 get a mix of both work and camp. Participants work as a group, in teams, with children their own age. They assist in daily farm tasks such as harvesting vegetables and flowers, weeding, transplanting, sowing seeds, weighing produce at the farm stand and more. Participants also learn how to prepare and cook a fresh organic meal from the farm's vegetables and herbs. Participants receive a stipend for their efforts at the end of the week.

"While they spend a lot of time working, the students also learn a lot too, because we spend time demonstrating skills and teaching them how to approach tasks," said Sullivan.

"They learn a lot about organic farming and gardening. We especially emphasize their connection to food and farming. We try to get them to talk about that, the importance of it," she said.

One way Holly Hill tries to connect the participants to farming is by talking about their family history.

"We talk about how far back in their family history farming is. We want the kids to feel more of a connection to their food, rather than just pulling it off the shelf at the supermarket," she said.

A highlight of the campers' week is the Friday lunch, where campers can show off their skills and new-found education when they cook a meal for their families.

"They do the whole thing, draw up the menu and do all the cooking. They really look forward to it," said Sullivan.

Sullivan said she believes the Holly Hill Young Farmers program fills a niche, hopefully, for adolescents who may have different interests from some of their peers.

"Not every child wants to go to soccer or gymnastics camp, but this is also is good, healthy exercise in the outdoors. The kids get outdoors, they learn, they grow things. There's a real sense of accomplishment," she said.

The 2003 Young Farmers Program is sponsored by the Friends of Holly Hill Farm, Inc. in partnership with Weir River Farm and the Trustees of Reservations. Three week-long sessions run throughout the month of July, Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. to noon. The cost is $150 per week. For more information, call the farm at 781-383-1455.

A country homecoming

Country songstress Jo Dee Messina headlines at Music Circus

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Jo Dee Messina might well be on her way to becoming this decade's Reba McIntyre, who, incidentally, the coming-of-age country music diva names as her main musical influence.

Like McIntyre, Messina has a bright, booming, twangy voice that jumps out of the radio speakers, plus strong songs with solid hooks and idealized lyrics ripe for pure country hit-making, from romantic good times and/or heartbreak to the release of hitting the open roads. Messina's own lengthy-and-growing string of hits adds personal, soul-baring tones, reflected in such lyrical sentiments as "I believe in things unseen/I believe in the message of a dream" ("Because You Love Me") and "Somewhere greener, somewhere warmer" ("Heads Carolina, Tails California").

Messina's success story in the ever-competitive Nashville country music industry — so far including three platinum albums, eleven Top Ten country singles including five number ones, the CMA (Country Music Association) Horizon Award, ACM's (Academy of Country Music) Top New Female Vocalist and a new Greatest Hits CD, which has debuted at number 14 on the Billboard national album chart — seems all the more notable given that the singer hails originally not from the usual country-music breeding grounds of the South or Midwest but from Holliston, Massachusetts.

New England's favorite country songbird brings her act home this Saturday with a rare home state show at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset. Opening for Messina is another homegrown country crooner, singer/songwriter — Hull's own Dave Foley.

"I usually come back to play in Massachusetts at least once a year," said Messina. "And it's always a very festive homecoming sort of thing. I see a lot of family and friends, and the show becomes a very laid-back type of event. Also very personalized for me, with people like my parents, brother, sisters, cousins or other family sitting in the audience."

Messina's brother and one of her sisters also figure heavily in her early career. The singer formed her first self-named band at age 16, with brother Vinnie on drums and sister Marianne on bass, playing at clubs and country-circuit venues all around New England. Including, as opener Foley in fact recalls, the Oakland House restaurant and pub in Hull at one point in the late 1980s. Messina herself recollects that even then her musical roots were all country.

"We worked really hard travelling all over New England playing usually three or four shows a week," Messina said. "Musically, we played songs by everyone from Patsy Cline to Tammy Wynette to Reba McIntyre to Jamie Fricke, then we'd occasionally toss in an oldie like 'Twist and Shout' or something like it."

But country has always come natural to Messina and her band.

"We were a country band all the way because that's what caught our ears most and was the style of music we wanted to do. I found from the beginning that country was what I most related to, pretty much for the reasons that most fans do, because of the way it tells stories and the pure simplicity of it."

Messina finally took that countrified focus to Nashville in 1990. By '95, she landed her first number 1 country record and, through her friendship with then rising country superstar Tim McGraw, signed the deal with Curb Records that launched her current high-profile career.

Jo Dee Messina will perform Saturday, June 21 at 8 p.m. at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset. Tickets are $47.50/$37.50 and are available through Ticketmaster at 617-931-2787, online at www.ticketmaster.com, and in person at the Box Office at the South Shore Music Circus open daily from noon to 6 p.m. For more information call the Music Circus at (781) 383-9850.

What's new is old

Dave Foley opens at music circus, kicks off latest release at Mount Blue

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

With his self-named band or solo-acoustic, Dave Foley is still solid roots-country, not just old school but the oldest, as defined by the likes of Jimmie Rodgers, Hank Williams Sr., and George Jones.

But on his new CD, The Willing Man, Foley has decided to update the sound and image just a bit. The disc is the singer's first in three years and his first wholly self-produced CD project without his former label, the locally based online independent cdfreedom.com.

Musically, Foley moves more toward a retro-chic 1950s/Sun Records country-rockabilly sound reminiscent of the earliest Elvis or Johnny Cash with the crisp production of 80s/90s George Strait and Dwight Yoakam records. He also departs from the band efforts of his previous discs and delivers this flavor while handling most of the instruments himself.

On stage, Foley has at least temporarily ditched those fringed, embroidered cowboy shirts that he and his band favored for its first few years through the mid 90s and opted for a look that's more, well, contemporary casual. But he's never letting go of the vintage 1955 Gretsch Country Club guitar or any of numerous other classic instruments he regularly deploys to find that genuine sound. Such should be the case once again as Foley appears this Saturday at the South Shore Music Circus as the opening act for headliner Jo Dee Messina.

"I wanted to keep the feel of the music as much genuine as possible, by using old guitars, old amps, just all vintage equipment. I played a 1961 Gretsch Anniversary guitar on some songs, and a 1963 Gibson J-45 on some others.
Dave Foley

"On the new CD, the writing and musical style are pretty much the same as on my other two discs with the band. Except I'm playing almost all the instruments myself, which let me do some experimenting with new sounds," said Foley, who lives in Hull and has played at numerous clubs and bars all around the South Shore, Boston area and Cape Cod.

Coffee cake plain and simple

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

A recent trip to Flour, a top-notch bakery in Boston's South End, put me face-to-face with a world-class coffee cake, one that was as simple as it was soft and creamy. The combination of simplicity and tender crumb reminded me that many coffee cakes are all about streusel rather than the cake. In fact, when I made three of my favorite coffee cake recipes, I discovered that the cake itself was second-rate. So I set out, with Flour's recipe as a road map, to go back to basics with a coffee cake that would be simple to throw together and yet ethereal in texture, a cake so good that it didn't need streusel.

The basic recipe included cake flour, crème fraiche, sugar, butter, eggs, leavener and vanilla. The mixing method, one borrowed from Rose Beranbaum's Cake Bible, is to blend softened butter with the dry ingredients before adding the liquid components. This method, as opposed to creaming the butter, produces a particularly soft, tender crumb and is perfect for coffee cakes. With this basic mixing method in hand, I set out to examine the ingredients.

The first step was to investigate the flour. I tried substituting some of the cake flour with all-purpose but did not like the results. (The cake was less tender, less moist, and flourier.) I then tested the amount of cake flour and finally settled on 2 2/3 cups down from my original quantity of 3 cups. Baking powder was best at 3/4 teaspoon and the baking soda ended up at a half teaspoon. Although many coffee cakes use a higher proportion of sugar, I felt that 1 1/2 cups was enough to add sweetness and moisture without being heavy or cloying. The original recipe called for 24 tablespoons of butter and I ended up reducing this to 16 tablespoons, hardly a diet cake, but nonetheless a bit less fatty. For proper mixing, the butter does have to be at room temperature – cold butter will simply not work itself into the flour.

As for eggs, many times I replace some of the whole eggs with just yolks. This creates a tenderer product and so I ended up with 2 whole eggs and 2 yolks. Although the Flour recipe called for crème fraiche, I switched to sour cream since it is readily available in supermarkets. I also tried substituting milk, yogurt, or buttermilk and although the cakes were good (the yogurt and buttermilk versions were best), the sour cream version was the clear winner. I used 1/2 teaspoon of salt and 1 teaspoon of vanilla to round out the cake.

In terms of mixing method, I did test creaming the butter – the standard coffee cake approach – and compared it to the butter/flour approach outlined above. The latter was the clear winner with a finer, tenderer crumb. However, I did find that adding 1/4 cup of the sour cream to the butter when mixed with the dry ingredients lightens the mixture and makes it easier to incorporate the wet ingredients later. This cake bakes up best at 350 degrees in a tube pan for about an hour. Once fully cooled, it can be removed from the pan and sprinkled with confectioners' sugar or use one of the simple glazes below.

PLAIN AND SIMPLE COFFEE CAKE

This recipe is best made using a standing mixer with a paddle attachment since butter has to be mixed with flour. To finish this cake, simply sprinkle with confectioner's sugar or use one of the glaze recipes below. This "coffee" cake can also be served as a simple dessert, perhaps served with some fresh berries.

1 cup sour cream
2 whole eggs plus 2 yolks
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 2/3 cups cake flour
1 1/2 cups granulated sugar
3/4 teaspoon baking powder
1/2 easpoon baking soda
1/2 teaspoon salt
2 sticks butter, softened but still cool, cut into 1-inch pieces plus additional butter for greasing the pan

1. Heat the oven to 350 degrees and adjust a rack to the center position. Grease a 10-inch tube pan with butter. Whisk 3/4-cup sour cream, the eggs and yolks, and the vanilla in a small bowl until well combined.

2. Place the flour, sugar, baking powder, baking soda, and salt in the bowl of a standing mixer fitted with the paddle attachment. Mix on low speed for 30 seconds to blend. Add the butter and 1/4 cup of the sour cream and mix on low speed until dry ingredients are moistened, about 1 minute. Increase the speed to medium and mix until the batter comes together, about 30 seconds. Increase the speed to medium high and mix for two minutes, stopping to scrape down the sides of the bowl once or twice. Add the sour cream/egg mixture to the batter in three batches mixing for about 20 seconds after each addition. Scrape down the sides of the bowl and beat on medium high until batter is homogeneous and fluffy, about 1 minute.

3. Transfer the batter to the prepared pan and bake until the cake is golden brown, feels set, and a cake tester comes out clean when inserted into the center, about 1 hour. Let cool completely on a rack. Run a thin knife around the perimeter of the cake as well as around the center tube. Invert the cake onto a rack and remove the tube pan and then reinvert the cake onto a plate. Sprinkle with confectioners' sugar before serving or drizzle with one of the glazes below.

Makes one 10-inch cake.

LEMON GLAZE

This simple glaze adds a lot of flavor and contrast to the cake.

1 cup confectioners' sugar
1 teaspoon lemon zest
2 teaspoons softened butter
2 tablespoons lemon juice

Whisk all ingredients together until you have a smooth glaze thin enough to drizzle over cake. If the glaze is too thick, add lemon juice a couple of drops at a time until desired consistency is reached.

ORANGE GLAZE

Substitute orange zest and juice for the lemon in the above recipe.

MARBLE CAKE VARIATION

In step 3, instead of transferring all of the batter into the prepared pan, spoon half of the batter (about 2 1/2 cups) in four large blobs at 3 o'clock, 6 o'clock, 9 o'clock, and 12 o'clock. Add 2 tablespoons cocoa powder to the remaining batter and whisk to combine. Place the chocolate batter in four large blobs in the spaces. Drag a butter knife in a spiral to gently combine the batters. The spiral should have several courses about 1/2 inch apart. Place the cake in the oven and proceed with step three.

Captivating container gardens

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

During the month of June our landscapes approach their peak appearance. The endless hours spent planting, fertilizing, weeding and mulching, come to fruition as moderate temperatures and plentiful moisture thicken our lawns and fill our gardens with luxuriant flowers and foliage. Regal rhododendrons in shades of pink, purple, red and white create breathtaking displays. Perennial borders attain their ultimate splendor. Flamboyant peonies, iris, and the tissue paper blooms of oriental poppies bloom in unison, their showy blossoms readily viewed from afar. Mounds of perennial geraniums, aromatic catmint (Nepeta), graceful Canterbury bells (Campanula), bleeding hearts (Dicentra), salvias, dainty coral bells (Heuchera), delicate Dianthus, fragrant roses and spectacular clematis paint the landscape with cheerful abandon. Sweet perfumes fill the air, birds sing and a profusion of butterflies float from flower to flower each time the sunshine returns. It is truly a glorious time of year.

Although dampness, cool temperatures and minimal sunshine have delayed our efforts to plant warm weather annuals and vegetables, it is not too late to sow seeds or grow transplants. Despite my best intentions every spring to plant these tender seedlings around Memorial Day, I tend to focus on the perennial borders early in the season. It is often not until the 4th of July that the annual and vegetable transplants find their way into soil but warmth, fertilizer and consistent moisture often make up for lost time. We still manage to harvest vegetables late in the season and the annuals put on a great show in the fall when many of the perennial blooms have faded.

Perennials have always been my primary passion, but in recent years, as the perennial borders have become overcrowded, I have developed a growing interest in container gardens. When the weather is cold and dreary and the ground is soggy, I am content to escape to the confines of a dry garage to plant colorful tropical blooms and foliages in a wide and ever-expanding collection of decorative pots. Even my vegetable garden has become containerized as I grew weary of cultivating robust broccoli and squash only to have Chuck and his offspring devour the plants just as they were prime for picking. While many transplants are rotting in the ground, those growing in my containers are flourishing.

Container gardens offer many advantages including portability and the ability to grow plants where soils are nonexistent or too wet, rocky or hard to cultivate. They make glorious accents to entryways, walks, patios and decks and can be used to brighten even the darkest corner. Nearly any vessel will do as long as it will hold a bit of soil and has a drainage hole. Many new materials have been developed that offer lightweight, attractive durable containers which mimic clay pottery and glazed ceramic containers offer a wealth of color possibilities. Be sure to consider the color of your container when choosing your plant material.

For container-grown plants to survive and thrive, it is critical that the growing medium allows for quick drainage. Use a lightweight, bagged, soilless mix rather than garden soil. Potting soils are available that offer fertilizer, water saver crystals and growing medium all in one bag. In hot, dry summers, the water saver crystals reduce the need for frequent watering but during extended periods of cool, wet weather, especially early in the season, some of these soils may become waterlogged. When planting a large or deep container, it is usually not necessary to fill the entire planter with potting soil. Several inches of Styrofoam packing peanuts in the bottom of larger planters will allow for ample drainage with the added benefit of being lightweight should you need to move the container from time to time. Crushed stone or small rocks could also be used to ensure good drainage and provide additional weight for taller plantings or to stabilize lightweight containers.

For a truly captivating display, adopt the same design principles used to create a full-scale garden. Depending on the size of your container, try to incorporate a variety of plants that offer textural contrasts, harmonizing color combinations and a diversity of forms. Look for a few taller plants to give vertical dimension to your container; the height of these plants should be in proportion to the size of the pot. The addition of cascading plants to a window box or container garden greatly expands the dimensions of the display, softening the container's edge, creating flow and providing even greater opportunities for color and texture. Repetition of color, form or texture will produce a more unified design. A simple approach might feature a singular upright plant in the center as a focal point, three shorter plants laid out in a triangle around the central point and three cascading plants in the spaces in between at the container's edge. The choice of plants would depend on the size of the container and the light conditions available.

In addition to providing colorful accents, container gardens can also be used to entice desirable wildlife visitors to your deck or patio. Pink and lavender flowers, especially daisies and lantana, will attract butterflies. Hummingbirds cannot resist red, orange or bright pink tubular flowers including fuchsia, salvia, flowering maple, nasturtium, petunias, million bells or impatiens.

Nurseries still have abundant supplies for creative containers. Use your imagination and add pizzazz to your doorstep, walkway, patio or deck with colorful, portable gardens.

"I play electric and acoustic guitars, electric bass and lap steel, which I used to get the almost Hawaiian-like sounds that you hear on most of the tunes. The lap steel is a different sort of instrument than the pedal steel, which creates that crying, moaning sound that you hear on a lot of honky-tonk records and stuff like that. The lap steel is more of a roots-country sound, coupled with a Hawaiian flair. Or like on the classic Hank Williams records. I'm basically going for the Don Helms sound, the one that he played in Hank's band as his lap steel player," Foley said.

Foley's virtual one-man studio show did require some spare vocal and instrumental support. Also on the disc are the singer's friend Marc Purcell — an Abington resident best known locally as a folk/blues singer/guitarist — on brush-stick drums, Foley's band-member Rich Holbrook on upright bass, Paul Stewart on acoustic archtop guitar and Jill Mattie on vocal harmonies. The disc was also produced at Stewart's River Street Recorders studio in Braintree.

"I wanted to keep the feel of the music as much genuine as possible, by using old guitars, old amps, just all vintage equipment," Foley said. "I played a 1961 Gretsch Anniversary guitar on some songs, and a 1963 Gibson J-45 on some others. All the lap steel playing though was on the 1955 National lap steel. The whole album is basically my concept of what I like to hear in country music."

Following his opening spot date at the Music Circus, Foley and his regular band will play their CD release party for the new disc next Saturday, June 28 at Mount Blue in Norwell. Foley himself plays regular solo-acoustic shows on Tuesdays at "The Banner," in the Hotel Thomas, Rockland, and Wednesdays at The Cove, Route 3A, Hingham.

TREATING EAR INFECTIONS

Three out of four children experience ear infections (otitis media) by the time they are three years old. This is a concern to parents because it has been thought that unless treated with powerful antibiotics, these infections could result in severe and sometimes permanent damage to the ears. A new set of guidelines stated by the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality, however, indicates that most children over age two do get better without antibiotics. Studies now show that, generally, an ear infection rarely causes serious damage. If the infection does not get better spontaneously within a couple of days, there is still plenty of time to treat with antibiotics without causing harm to the child.

For children as well as adults, good hearing is not something to be taken for granted. Nearly 20 million Americans are believed to suffer from hearing loss, including school-age children (three out of every 100 affected) to senior citizens (one out of every four affected). If you suspect a hearing problem for yourself or a family member, give us a call at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 781-337-1144. We'll arrange a convenient free hearing test at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, to determine the best way to proceed.

P.S. Symptoms of a true ear infection include pain, redness, swelling, fluid in the ear, fever, and, sometimes, a temporary hearing problem.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 18

This is a day to break new ground in your business or personal life. If you have been contemplating making a change or beginning a new endeavor, start today. An innovative Aquarius moon prompts you to explore new horizons and develop new alliances. At 9:08 p.m. the moon forms a harmonious contact to the sun and becomes inactive. Group activities, team sports are highlighted this evening.

THURSDAY, JUNE 19

Planetary influences turn around completely today and tomorrow, as the moon travels in the last sign of zodiac, Pisces. The moon enters Pisces at 1:57 a.m., and an alignment to Uranus may disrupt the flow of the morning. Allow extra time for unanticipated distractions or obstacles. Fortunately, this influence passes over by midmorning. The remainder of the day rates high for developing art, music, photography projects. Go with your first impression. Pay attention to your dreams.

FRIDAY, JUNE 20

The positive aspects of a Pisces moon are reinforced by harmonious alignments of Mercury and Venus to Neptune. Creativity, artistic sensitivity are at an all-time high. Follow your intuition. You can achieve breakthroughs and find new inspiration with projects that have been difficult to work through. On the other hand, this is not a favorable time for making practical decisions, purchases or long-range commitments. Mercury and Venus conjoin, setting the stage for a social evening. Relax and mellow out completely.

SATURDAY, JUNE 21

Take it slow and easy this morning. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 10:45 a.m., and the Pisces moon becomes inactive. At 11:06 a.m. a fiery Aries moon takes over. However, a 90-degree alignment to Saturn at 3:36 p.m. may generate delays, reversals, setbacks. Cool your heels; be more adaptable and easygoing. The big news today is that the summer solstice arrives at 3:11 p.m., when the sun enters the sign Cancer. This is a great evening for partying. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

SUNDAY, JUNE 22

This day rates high across the board. Influences are prime for initiating new enterprises, signing contracts, launching any major activity. It is best to begin before 1:55 p.m., when Mercury forms a harmonious contact to expansive Jupiter. In addition, the moon travels in Aries, forming positive contacts to five planets throughout the day and evening. And Mars, the planetary ruler of Aries, prepares to interact with Saturn. Go for the gold. This is also a wonderful day for vacationing; let more fun and joy into your life. The moon aligns with Pluto at 11:28 p.m. and becomes inactive.

MONDAY, JUNE 23

It can be difficult to get back to business today. A polarity of Mercury and Pluto affects the morning, and warns you to avoid getting caught up in hassles, negative thinking, bad habits. On the other hand, this is a great day for vacationing. The Aries moon continues inactive travel until 11:15 p.m., when it enters Taurus. Alignments of Venus-Jupiter and Mars-Uranus in the afternoon and evening encourage fun and games, new adventures, enjoying the good things in life.

TUESDAY, JUNE 24

Planetary action sets the stage for another unusual and interesting day. The sun aligns with Saturn, Uranus and Mars. Saturn forms a harmonious 120-degree contact to Uranus. Venus opposes Pluto. The moon continues active travel in Taurus. This planetary combination reinforces a recurring message this month: Take responsibility for your happiness and free yourself from limited thinking and bad habits. Begin a new chapter in your life.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 25

After the recent barrage of planetary activity, influences calm down considerably today, giving you an opportunity to rest and regroup. The Taurus moon aligns with Jupiter at 9:41 a.m. and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. Catch up on projects already begun, handle routine chores and errands. Lighten up, relax, mellow out completely this evening.

THURSDAY, JUNE 26

An inactive Taurus moon can make for a slow start to this day. Yesterday's advice applies to this morning as well. Finish old projects rather than starting anything new. At 12:13 p.m. the moon enters lively Gemini, bringing an energy boost. This moon forms challenging 90-degree alignments to Uranus and Mars, however. Give greater attention to accuracy and details. Use extra caution if you are operating machinery; drive defensively. Don't take chances or do anything risky.

FRIDAY, JUNE 27

Bright and sunny astrological weather prevails today. The moon travels in versatile Gemini. The green light is on for starting new activities. Today's influences are ideal for work that requires communicating with people. Make phone calls, send letters, faxes and e-mails. You will be most productive, if you handle a variety of projects rather than one that demands intense concentration. A lunar alignment to Jupiter makes this evening prime for partying. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

ZBA wraps up house hearing

3 Jerusalem Lane may set precedent

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The walls in the converted downstairs meeting room at Town Hall feature a mural depicting Cohasset's most picturesque scenes from St. Stephen's in the village to the town's rocky coastline. When completed, the pictures — being painted by high school students — will tell more than the proverbial 1,000 words about what makes Cohasset such a desirable place to live.

However, the parallel at last week's Zoning Board of Appeals marathon meeting may have been lost on those in the packed room, who spent upwards of 3-1/2 hours listening to what has become a tangled mess of property owners' rights. As the meeting wore on, audience members squirming on plastic seats, struggled to follow the complexities of what now can be best dubbed "the 3 Jerusalem Lane saga."

"This structure is in full compliance with zoning requirements save one issue, this undersized lot."
— Martin Healy, attorney

When finally resolved, the precedent-setting "Ayer case" will no doubt put Cohasset on a different kind of map. When arguing cases in places with water views such as Duxbury, Cape Cod or Nantucket, lawyers will certainly add 3 Jerusalem Lane to their repertoire.

What's at stake is a

Helping dunes make a comeback

Would protect fragile ecosystem

By Samantha Brown

Flanked on both sides by gorgeous vistas, Atlantic Avenue is arguably one of the most beautiful spots in town. With Sandy Beach serving as a popular summertime hangout for beach-goers, it's ironic that just across the street, a fragile ecosystem is feeling the effects of those very same people.

Across from Sandy Beach lies Little Harbor, a valuable natural resource which Jim Shipsky of the Cohasset Environmental Support Group said has slowly but surely come into a potentially dangerous ecological situation over the years. Shipsky said the salt marsh has been gradually filling up with sand as a result of damage caused to the dunes, which used to serve as its natural protection, threatening to Contract was not renewed

"I'm most proud of working with the staff, PSO and school to create a cohesiveness, a Deer Hill family, with everyone working well together."
— Paul Callahan

Last Thursday was a tough day for Paul Callahan. The Deer Hill principal is leaving a school and a job he loves to join the unemployment lines.

All day long mothers gave him hugs, dads shook his hand and wished him well, and pupils presented him with notes and flowers. Everyone, including the 52-member faculty and staff, gave him standing ovations (three in all) during the grade 6 graduation ceremony.

A few minutes later, the 55-year-old whose passion besides education is running marathons, quickly jogged over to the driveway with the rest of the faculty to wave goodbye to the students who were aboard big, yellow school buses. Little hands grasping report cards waved by the windows, teachers standing on the school's front lawn smiled and waved back. The scene provided a farewell picture deserving of a Norman Rockwell illustration.

But for Callahan, who lives in Hingham, this was not the typical, happy ending to the school year. A year ago, Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey gave him notice that his contract, which

Marine educational center launched in Hagerty House

Roy Herzfelder cuts the ribbon

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Imagine traveling down a dead-end street which leads you to the peaceful blue waters of the ocean. Boats drift by and a hint of diesel fuel mixes with the scent of salt in the air, as the sun sets in the distance. While it may sound like a Hollywood set, or even a page from a romance novel, it was the backdrop of a ribbon-cutting ceremony commemorating the opening of the Center for Student Coastal Research in the former Hagerty building off Parker Avenue.

With such an inspirational setting, the CSCR should experience continued success in its new home.

The CSCR, which is governed by a 10-member Board of Directors made up of local residents, has grown to 30 participants and counting, gathering valuable information pertaining to the coastal watershed. Each year, students of all ages will be able to build on previous data collected, providing a service to the town while learning valuable research techniques.

The center, located in Mariners Park, will aim to educate and raise awareness about the marine and coastal ecosystems in Cohasset. Working with local schools, the facility will provide programs that will not only teach children about sea life, but will also benefit the town.

Summer programs will also be a big part of the center, giving students hands-on exploration of Cohasset's coast. While the programs for high school students will focus on in-depth study, activities for younger children will be geared more toward exploration of the outdoors and waterways of Cohasset.

In a speech given just before the ribbon cutting ceremony last Friday, Cohasset Board of Health Chairman Steve Bobo, who is also on the CSCR Board, thanked students for their hard work to date.

"You are giving us information about what's happening in water bodies and green space in the town which we would not be able to get in any other way, because in these difficult fiscal times, we could not afford to

The company provided a bid $60,957, with the top three bids within $2,000 of each other. The schools have leased buses through the Coastal before with much success.

The new bus will be a Bluebird, which Peggy Litchfield said is "exactly what we want," and is what she currently drives.

Cleaning service options still need some tidying up

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

More analysis of budget figures from the schools as well as the town need to be discussed, along with figures from the cleaning companies.

Outsourcing – or contracting out for school cleaning – took one step closer to reality last week when the school committee decided to go ahead with plans to hire a cleaning service. However, the questions of when the service would start and what it would entail are still on the table.

School committee members discussed a summary of proposals and recommendations from Town Finance Director Michael Buckley's office at Town Hall to help in the decision making process. The summary listed recommended top choices for outsourcing companies, based on price and bid specifications.

The company most highly recommended to the schools is One Source, which operates out of Somerville. According to the summary, One Source is the second largest janitorial service provider in the U.S. with a very strong presence in eastern Massachusetts, especially on the South Shore.

One Source would be responsible for cleaning school restrooms and locker rooms on a nightly basis among myriad other duties including major cleaning during school vacations and over the summer.

When submitting a bid, companies were to include costs for all three schools, Town Hall, the police station and the public restrooms at the new Center for Student Coastal Research. One Source gave the lowest bid, with a total package cost of $264,232.80.

While One Source was recommended for the schools, the Contract Cleaning Collaborative was suggested as the top choice for service in town buildings. Specializing in small to medium sized buildings, with little public school experience, the CCC's total package bid was much too high for the current budget. By using CCC instead of One Source for town buildings, the savings would amount to roughly$4,500.

The summary suggested the schools contract One Source for general housekeeping and retain four current custodians. However, the school committee would like to maintain six.

Notice has been given to members of the custodial staff that outsourcing may happen within 60 days, depending on whether terms of a contract can be decided upon. Current staff may be asked to work through the summer if a decision can not be made.

"This has to work number-wise and that will decide [the company's] start date," said Supt. Edward Malvey.

More analysis of budget figures from the schools as well as the town need to be discussed, along with figures from the cleaning companies. Financing will be a work in progress until the numbers add up for all parties concerned.

An extension has been given until late July, allowing school committee members time for one more meeting before a final decision is made.

Army Corps seeks more detail on Greenbush issues

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

The Army Corps of Engineers (ACE), the lead federal agency reviewing the proposed restoration of the 17-mile Greenbush rail line, isn't ready to issue a permit allowing the project to move forward.

Two months remain of a six-month delay announced by the MBTA in February to resolve outstanding permitting and right-of-way issues for the $470 million project. Governor Mitt Romney then said his administration would review the economic feasibility of the proposal.

Jon Carlisle, spokesperson for the Secretary of Transportation and Construction office, noted that the purpose of the construction delay was to allow time to address those types of issues. "We want to be sure prior to making a final decision whether or not to move forward with Greenbush that all permitting, right-of-way, and mitigation issues are settled so we can have a full appreciation of the costs associated with the project," he said. "It's a complicated process, with quite a number of permits to secure, but we're working to get through the issues in order to put a final price tag on the project and make a decision accordingly."

In a June 16 letter to MBTA Director of Environmental Affairs Andrew Brennan, the Corps listed a number of issues which still need to be addressed. Those include one related to the Section 106 review process concerning impacts on historic resources and another with regard to the use of four-quadrant gates, which are deemed safer than two-quad gates because they block both lanes in each direction at grade crossings. The MBTA favors the installation of two-quad gates, which block only the right lanes and are often combined with median barriers to prevent motorists from cutting around the gate.

The ACE is requesting the MBTA arrange a meeting with the Federal Railroad Administration, MBTA safety experts, Corps staff, and representatives of the towns affected by Greenbush restoration to further review the issue. "We need to better understand the specific concerns that exist over the use of four-quad gates at various crossings in the Greenbush corridor in order for us to conclude that four-quad gates at specific locations should be dismissed.," the ACE stated. The Corps is also requiring additional analysis related to new drainage features planned for Hingham's Town Brook and more information about archaeological investigations. The ACE is also asking for more information about a recommendation made recently by the project's design-build team that vent buildings be constructed for the tunnel under Hingham Square.

The ACE is allowing Brennan 30 days to respond: "If we do not hear from you (within that time period), we will close your file," wrote Crystal I. Gardner, Chief, Permits & Enforcement Section, Regulatory Branch of the ACE. "No work within our jurisdiction may be started until you receive a permit signed by our District Engineer or his authorized representative."

Maritime Museum open for summer

The Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum at 4 Elm St., Cohasset Village is open for its summer season. Currently the museum is open weekdays from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m., excluding Mondays. The Maritime Museum is an 18th-century ship chandlery, originally located on Border Street at Cohasset Harbor.

Built in the mid-1700s by Samuel Bates, it was the supply building and counting house for the Bates family fishing business at Bates Wharf, Cohasset Harbor. After the end of the mackerel fishing era, the old chandlery was owned by financier Clarence W. Barron who summered nearby at Margin Street. In the mid-1950s, his granddaughter, Jessie (Bancroft) Cox gave the former chandlery to the historical society and it was moved from Border Street to the village to go along with the society's other antique building, the 1819 Capt. John Wilson House.

Since 1960, the Maritime Museum, the historical name for which is "Bates Ship Chandlery," has featured exhibits portraying Cohasset's long maritime history. Exhibits include ship models, 19th-century fishing gear, navigation instruments, charts, illustrations, shipwright's tools, relics from shipwrecks. Other exhibits show the history of lifesaving and of Minot's Ledge Lighthouse. On the second floor, there is a general collection of historical artifacts from early Cohasset, including cordwainer's tools, housewright's tools, old school chairs and desks, a "village apothecary" and a selection of artifacts from Tower Bros. Store and chandlery, once also located on Tower's Wharf at the harbor. Come in to see the society's historian or other volunteers, afternoons at the Cohasset Maritime Museum.

For more information, call 781-383-1434; and the Cohasset Historical Society's mailing address is P.O. Box 627, Cohasset 02025.

Curtain rises on original 'Jack Beanstalk' production

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

This story is the first in a series, outlining the process from start to finish, of producing children's theater.

Day one held introductions, auditions and excitement for students participating in this year's Children's Drama Workshop production of "Jack Beanstalk".

Sitting around the circle printed on the mats in the new Deer Hill auditorium, children of varying ages came together to begin what will be a seven-week process from start to finish.

"I see lots of familiar faces and lots of new faces," said Beth Deveney as she welcomed cast members. Deveney has been running the workshop with sisters Grace and Sarah for the past 15 years. This year, Beth has written the play the children will be performing, making the show an even more rewarding endeavor.

After taking attendance, Beth asked children to introduce themselves to the group, one by one and share their name, age, how many years they have participated in drama, or if this is their first year, how they became involved, along with the most important information, what is their favorite cookie. While the most popular answer was chocolate chip, sisters Beth and Sarah both said any cookie made by Grace was their favorite.

One student said he had been participating in drama for the past seven years. "That's longer than some of you have been alive!" said Beth.

Rules were discussed, with the most important being "have fun at all times!" Stressing that every part in the play is equally important, the sisters said there should be no pressure felt during auditions. Every cast member receives a part to play in the final production and everyone has a chance to be on stage.

To give students a feeling for how the parts should sound, staff members acted out a sample scene prior to auditions. After the first reading, examples of "bad acting" were portrayed, where students had to tell what was wrong with the performance, as a reminder of what not to do in their own audition.

Students eagerly await their chance to impress the judges before auditions.

Having written the dialogue for the play, Beth was very excited to hear the children act it out.

Students were called up on stage in groups, by character choice, and were given the opportunity to "impress the judges." The parts of the Mad Cow, Jack, and three Stalker Sisters were read by a number of talented young actors.

Many tried out, but the auditions will have to be carried into other rehearsals to give all 67 participants a chance to go for the part they want.

The day ended with students learning some choreography for dance scenes in the play. Dancing to Buster Poindexter's "Hot Hot Hot" the children had a wonderful time learning the steps and really enjoyed the music.

In the weeks to follow, stations will be set up for groups of children to work on specific elements of the show, such as singing, or choreography, led by various staff members.

The production includes children from the ages of 5-12, which Beth hopes will allow members to make "friends of all ages" by the time the show is finished.

The program is open to any members of the surrounding community, with an enrollment fee of $440. Performances are scheduled for Tuesday, Aug. 5 at 10 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. and Wednesday, Aug. 6 at 1 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. and will be held in the Deer Hill auditorium.

Popular principal won't be back

is up June 30, would not be renewed. Under the school-based management in the 10-year-old Education Reform Act, superintendents can hire and fire their principals and administrators. Malvey reports to the School Committee but his personnel decisions do not need board approval, although the committee has said it supported Malvey's decision in this case.

For Callahan, who wants and needs another job, it's a touchy situation in a tight job market. Having your contract "not renewed" may not put his application at the top of the list. He will receive no severance package, and he needs several more years to qualify for full retirement benefits from the Massachusetts Teachers Retirement Board.

The popular principal, who in seven years did not take a sick day, shepherded the student body and staff through a $10.1 million, massive renovation-expansion project, meaning the students and faculty have been living in a construction zone for the better part of two years.

"I always put education first," he said. "I made sure the education process was not disrupted at all."

That wasn't always easy, sometimes teachers had to pick-up and move several times during the year. And being in a building site/school meant weekly meetings with the construction team.

"Through all that, we continued our high MCAS scores and we always made sure the kids were safe – workers and children were never near each other," Callahan said.

Even Malvey praised Callahan's efforts in his grade 6 graduation remarks noting the community owes him a "huge debt of gratitude" for staying on top of the project. But the two men differ as to who should be in charge of the building going forward, especially with the grade 3-5 reconfiguration coming up in September '04. But after seven years, Callahan — who was hired by former Supt. Stephen Hart — still thinks he is the best man to lead the school.

Back in the fall of 1996, Callahan came on board after a turbulent time. The school had had five principals in three years. Long-time Principal Kenneth Ekberg's retirement was followed by two interim principals before Donna Hartlage was hired. She left in 1996, then curriculum coordinator Ruth Fennessey took over until Callahan started.

"I'm most proud of working with the staff, PSO and school to create a cohesiveness, a Deer Hill family, with everyone working well together," Callahan said.

It was a difficult time, recalls Ralph Kidder, who was on the School Committee when Callahan came on board. Hartlage left in a swirl of controversy after she allegedly hit a student during picture day at the school.

"Paul was what the community needed at that point in time," Kidder says. "He brought us together during a trying time in leadership at the school.

"He took charge, settled things down and got the focus back on education."

While fully aware of the chain of command under Education Reform, Kidder, who served on the School Committee for three terms, is troubled by the current board's silence on Callahan's departure.

"The taxpayers and public need some explanation," he said, understanding that not all personnel issues are public. "This should not go unremarked.

"The lack of information is inappropriate – again with the caveat that personnel decisions are touchy subjects and no one expects everything to be laid out," he said.

Malvey said he has nothing but the best wishes for Callahan.

"I'm sure he will find a position suited to his abilities," he said. Malvey described Callahan as a "true operations person" but said it was time to move on. He said there were performance issues which he declined to share.

Adrienne MacCarthy, who is Cohasset PSO president and former Deer Hill PSO representative and president, said Callahan really loved Deer Hill.

"It wasn't the physical setting but the people within it," she said about the 50-year-old building in need of an overhaul. "He brought everyone together as a team."

MacCarthy said Callahan was always "there."

"Whether it was a car wash to raise money for Camp Bournedale, building the new playground or walking the corridors during school — Paul was always present and took part in every project," she said. "He supported that school with his whole heart."

With Callahan's replacement hired, Malvey – who has been superintendent for five years – will have in place principals in Cohasset's three schools that he has brought on board.

Callahan, whose wife is a schoolteacher in Quincy, is sending his résumés out. He wants to stay in school administration where he feels he can have a positive effect on more students.

"As a principal, as was the case here at Deer Hill, I can have an effect on 361 kids – rather than just 20 or so in my classroom," he said.

Callahan had a special bond with this year's graduating sixth-graders because they attended the grade 4-6 Deer Hill School as kindergartners, when the seams were bursting at the old Osgood School.

"It was an emotional day," Callahan said with some sadness about the last day of school and all the good wishes from students, parents and staff.. "But now I'm going to be collecting unemployment while I look for another position."

Malvey hires Abington principal

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The Deer Hill School will have a new man at the helm come September, when Keith Gauley joins the staff as the new principal. Gauley has been serving as principal of the Center Elementary School in Abington for the past five years. He was selected out of a field of some 54 candidates.

A graduate of Cornell University, Gauley received a bachelor of science in human service studies, then went on to earn his master's degree in elementary education from the University of Massachusetts. He received his principal certification from Bridgewater State College in 1998.

Gauley met first with an interviewing committee of 10, which consisted of two members of the School Committee, two administrators, three parents, and two teacher representatives with one alternate. From there, 30 applicants were selected to be prescreened by Supt. Edward Malvey, of which 11 were selected to participate in final interviews. Two of those candidates pulled out for various reasons.

The consensus of the interviewing committee matched Malvey's own choice. "Without question, Kevin was the candidate," Malvey said. "He interviewed extremely well."

Malvey made an on-site visit to the Center School to meet with staff members, as well as parents, students and Gauley's current superintendent, who all expressed how fortunate they felt to have had him in their school, he said.

There will be a period of transition over the summer while Gauley ties up loose ends in Abington. As the Assistant Director of the Cape Cod Sea Camps in Brewster, Gauley has prior commitments he must attend to, and will be gradually working up to his full-time duties in Cohasset by mid-August, Malvey said.

Helping dunes make a comeback

throw the marsh's delicate ecosystem out of balance.

When humans walk or drive over the fragile dune vegetation, it destroys the plants, whose roots act as anchors to help keep the heaps of sand in place.

As a result of the damage, members of the Support Group have begun working on a project to have snow fencing installed along the harbor side of Atlantic Avenue. The two-foot high wooden slats would serve as a physical reminder to help keep people off the dunes, allowing Mother Nature the opportunity to take over. Over time, it is expected that the dunes would bury the fence so it would be completely out of sight.

Shipsky explained that if people and cars leave the dunes alone, over the course of time they will replenish themselves and new vegetation will grow on its own, helping to keep the dunes anchored where they are. With more stability, the dunes can become a protective shield to the harbor.

"What needs to happen is nothing," he said.

Salt marshes, which Shipsky describes as "the most fertile environment on the planet" have rich organic material at the bottom, which plays a vital role in the food chain. Many species of fish spawn in the marshes, but when the bottom gets covered with sand, which has no nutritional value, it becomes increasingly harder for the marsh to support life.

Living on the coast, the fragility of the dunes is something many people never give a second thought. Group member Mimi White has fond memories of playing on dunes as a child. She remembers running up to their tops and rolling down their sides with her friends. To her the dunes were like mountains. "All of us have memories of that. The dunes were considered playthings," she said.

Nowadays, White recognizes that we no longer have the luxury of "using Mother Nature for our own pleasure." Group member Karen Quigley agrees and sees a real need for people to speak up and spread the word about pressing environmental issues such as the dunes. "You need to be willing to be disliked for the sake of the environment," she said.

The support group was started by Shipsky, White, and Besty Keefe in the summer of 2001, and gradually added members Nan Shipsky, Jim's wife, Sarah Peacock, and Quigley. Its members have also individually become involved in various other projects including protection of open space, recycling at town buildings, volunteering at Holly Hill Farm, jet noise and pollution as well as dunes protection and restoration.

The goal of the group is to support each other in their individual projects as well as group endeavors, and to help curb environmentally harmful momentum that exists in today's lifestyles and culture, and deal with the discouragement of that momentum, Shipsky said New members are always welcome.

Last week, Shipsky presented the group's proposal to Selectmen, who suggested he get approval by the Conservation Commission. He hopes the Commission will take a look at the proposal at 7:30 p.m. tonight (Thursday) at Town Hall.

A silver lining

Now that summer appears to be upon us with its accompanying 90-degree heat and humidity, some may already be hankering for those endless wet, rainy, cold spring days.

More than a few weary folk climbed the steps to the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square this week looking a bit overheated and fatigued from the sultry day. They paused to chat a while in our air-conditioned environs before venturing back out into hot Hingham Square.

One thing we've observed from this extended stretch of unfriendly weather dating back to the recent long winter, which now seems to be a distant memory – is meteorological matters seem to bring us staid New Englanders out of our collective shell.

Noted for being stuffy and rather cold in nature, with little small talk, weather conditions get us interacting with one another at the supermarket, gas station or just about anywhere around town.

Complaining about the weather is in fact a passion that we New Englanders all seem to share. Take a moment and think about how often you've grumbled about damp, dark and depressing days this past spring to anyone that would listen.

There was even some humor in our collective misery. In the depths of last winter, we heard weather reports about how much worse temperatures and snow levels were in International Falls, Minn.; and this spring we overheard remarks such as, "If I wanted to live like this, I'd move to Seattle."

Here in New England we have four seasons, although Mother Nature does trick us from time to time and forgets to give us one of them. Until the thermometer rose this week, we were worried summer was on her list of omissions this year.

Things could always be worse. There are floods in Tampa and fires in Arizona, two places noted for great weather nearly all of the time. Here, at least, we have variety and never find weather boring.

As Mark Twain said, "There is a sumptuous variety about the New England weather that compels the stranger's admiration—and regret. The weather is always doing something there; always attending strictly to business; always getting up new designs and trying them on people to see how they will go. But it gets through more business in Spring than in any other season. In the Spring I have counted one hundred and thirty-six different kinds of weather inside of twenty-four hours."

So what's left for us to do? Like good New Englanders, when our weather gets up to its old tricks, we continue to grin and bear it (and moan about it to whomever we can).

What do people talk about in places like San Diego where the weather is practically perfect?

LWV learns about wind power

Could Hingham and other South Shore towns benefit from lower energy prices if more windmills are built similar to the one at Hull Gut near the high school?

Malcolm Brown, a renewable energy professional, posed this question to members of the Hingham League of Women Voters at its recent Annual Meeting at Siro's in Hull.

Brown and his wife Anne Larsen led Hull residents in the late 1990s to build the present Hull wind turbine, which replaced a 1984 mini-windmill. The current windmill/turbine, which went online in December 2001, provides Hull with 100 per cent of its street and traffic lights, producing about 1.5 million kilowatts annually. It is the first commercial-scale windpower unit on the East Coast.

Brown and Larsen previously had built a micro-hydro powerplant in the New York Catskills Mountains in the 1980s. That plant provides power to a National Public Radio (NPR) radio station.

Wind power is the fastest growing renewable energy producer in the world; many European countries have used wind turbines for years.

The League of Women Voters is an educational nonpartisan political organization that provides voter information and more. The League welcomes men and women U.S. citizens of voting age.

Doesn't like village design

TO THE EDITOR:

If I have ever seen a group sold a bill of goods, it is our Board of Selectmen regarding the downtown improvement questions. The fact that our genuinely hallowed village is in dire need of new sidewalks and crosswalks has been seized by a small group funded privately, calling themselves "Revitalizers," and a design group who propose for us as Harold Coughlin so eloquently stated at last Tuesdays meeting, schematics that appear in urban areas and malls. Cohasset's need for new sidewalks has parlayed itself, much to the financial gain of these two entities, into a contrived almost Disney-like proposal for our town's future.

In writing I am convinced that I have a far better read than the Selectmen on what the people want for their town and feel they have been steered in this direction of senseless frivolity from the outset. Dean Rizzo's surveys from the office of the C.R.C. were cleverly worded and totally flawed. From day one the questions were: What kind of materials would you prefer in the bump out areas, brick or concrete, etc. Never were the questions asked: Would you like to see the sidewalks and crosswalks simply fixed? Would you like to see bump outs on every corner of the village like the ones in Lowell and Maynard or wherever?

The Selectmen's solution has been to hire a design firm to the tune of $150,000 to come up with the same concept it did for these other places, complete with these huge bump outs every where to cope with urban problems such as where is everyone going to sit, and act as "traffic calmers."

To the probably 90 percent of you who are unaware of the goings on here, please check out the proposed bump out at the top of Depot Court which seems to be about half as big as the entire village, and see what you think.

Last Monday, June 16, the selectmen met down town with a fire truck to quell any skepticism of the design. As the truck pulled off Elm Street heading North on South Main, at about 15 miles per hour, Craig Miller of Waterfield Design looked up in jubilant disbelief and proclaimed to no one in particular, "Hey, it didn't even pass over into the oncoming lane!" I wondered if that would be the case if the boys were heading to a fire and the Budweiser truck was coming the other way.

As the little pow-wow continued I talked to two of the Selectmen both of whom had a tale of woe regarding safety downtown. Tom Callahan stated that his son and his buddies had much trouble crossing South Main Street Saturday morning and added that those concerns were coming from a city kid. Tom, I've played with the city kids, you ain't no city kid. Whatever happened to stop, look, and listen?

The other Selectmen I spoke to stated how dangerous the crossing at the top of Depot Court is. The proposal there is to build one huge bump out extending from the rug store corner preventing a slow speed, 100 year old turnaround vexing traffic on to other destinations instead of back into town. Suddenly, Cohasset, the safest place we all know of on earth, according to these well paid uniformed outsiders, is a jungle of pedestrian peril.

Three years ago, the town hired Jim Shipsky to do a study of the comings and goings of downtown Cohasset. After a week, Jim reported back that the village functions best left the way it is and that any changes to constrict or re-direct traffic would be ill-advised as one who has been observing the same setting for a very long time. I could not agree more.

Mr. Callahan complains that we have been at this for three years and must make a decision. The main reason for this is that any change proposals presented to the Waterfield Group, no matter how vehemently urged due to common sense have been ignored. Their version of how things should be, complete with the same features of all the other places they have done perpetually re-appears. As long as we allow this sideshow to continue, Waterfield gets paid - by us. I told them unequivocally that a curb could not be built at the back of my store. That curb appeared on those plans until last month. Would anyone claim to have known by looking at their design pictures that they planned to wipe out the pump area in front of the hardware store only to build a larger one?

Any logical questions asked at these meetings is almost always answered in an illogical, Clintonesque, I am smarter than you and know what is good for you manner.

After three experiences with these people from Waterfield, two of which they didn't have their plans, one of which they were a half hour late one becomes a bit leery when they put an "S" on the end of Brook Street.

In my opinion, pertaining to us, the people of Cohasset , not the CRC or the Selectmen who go back home and leave us with this tasteless mess as their legacy, these people don't know what the heck they are talking about!

I grew up in this town which contained many independent-minded smart people like Charlie Butman and Burt Pratt and Jesse Cox who along with my mother used to feed my sister and I and weren't above having a drink or two while doing so.

After Kimballs and the Shack burned down, Jesse threatened to lie down in the street to prevent the building of the motel at the harbor. Too bad we didn't listen.

At Tuesday's meeting, I demanded that three dimensional markers be put up to apprise the town of these proceedings. Mr. Davis of Waterfield bristled and I was told that did not make any sense. At that point I concluded that making any sense had escaped from this forum and started to wonder if an empty storefront would favorably fit into the plans of these "Revitalizers." Waterfield claims to be losing one parking space regarding this project when in fact if you take into consideration all the informal parking, the loss is much more significant.

I find it sorrowful that this group except for Fred Koed lacks the taste and sophistication to heed the words of Ralph Dormitzer and Harold Coughlin.

May I suggest the following: To criticize without solution is non-constructive and cavalier. Mark Haddad has gotten the town an extension on the grant that has us where we are. Observing the school situation might make one skeptical but assuming it is in place. I might suggest that we thank Dean Rizzo and Waterfield for their efforts and suggest they start lining up their next gig. I understand Dean has already done that is in Quincy where I feel his concepts will be a much better fit.

Because we have some time lets get some people together with some real taste and foresight. There are many such citizens in this town. Let's have a little fun with this and not create a Disneyland in the meantime so that if the movie people come looking for an old genuine place a third time they won't pass us by because we too strongly resemble Everywhere else, U.S.A. Jesse Cox would agree.

Anti-Avalon bias is evident

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to address the article about AvalonBay titled "Baby Boom" in the June 12 Mariner.

I waited for the June 19 Mariner to come out, as I expected that somebody else in the community might address the issues the article brought out, or at least the larger issue hidden within.

The article and contributors of information within are clearly biased as anti-Avalon, as the subtitle "School numbers may jump if Avalon gets OK" simply suggests. Did an anti-Avalon somebody pay for this?

Will the numbers not jump if the 20-plus, three-, four- and more-bedroom houses built in the town each year add three, four and more kids per household, every year? That's 60-80 students per year from new families moving in. There's no mention of that readily available statistic in the piece.

Also absent is the fact that the walkways mentioned which would be needed for the kids to get to the bus and safe access to the schools on roads might be paid for by Avalon, especially if they don't spend all their money on crazy legal issues. Play areas for the kids mentioned in the article would probably be paid for in similar fashion, and perhaps be on the Avalon property. Avalon seems to take pretty good care of its properties. We should all do so well.

Perhaps the most comical of comments by the School Committee was the addition of Avalon babies would require more facilities in town such as a year-round swimming/diving center.....is this a disadvantage to a town which would thrive with a year-round facility? Remember, this is a town which raises millions for a beautiful library, and buries wires in its downtown to further enhance its beauty.

The article also ignores the fact part of the fabric of Cohasset for centuries has been the lower income people that so many fear. How about those elderly long time citizens who simply do not need to have a house and lawn to care for anymore, but have long time friends and family roots in town? Should the town's wealthy homeowner citizens push them off shore on icebergs as their desire for home ownership diminishes?

The "larger issue" mentioned at the head of this letter is the most distressing. Should the Mariner want to keep publishing such explicit articles of bias, or the town committees want to set the clock of reality/diversity back even more, perhaps it will be easier for the town to simply just

Why a great tan is bad for you

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Americans, who eight years ago seemed to be heeding warnings to take precautions against the sun, are now back at the beach with little protection, according to a new survey. Several weeks ago, we talked about armor. We can look on Sunscreen as just another form of armor, and, it seems that our armor against skin cancer is being forgotten. In 1996, 54 percent of those who were out in the sun used sunscreen regularly, according to the American Academy of Dermatology (AAD), but the organization's 2003 survey found that the percentage of Americans reporting regular use of sunscreen has dropped to 40 percent, says Dr. Darrell Rigel, a dermatologist at the New York University Medical Center.

Even more discouraging is that young people under 25, the age group for whom sun protection is most important for preventing future cancers, are even less likely to use sunscreen. Only 34 percent of this age group reports using sunscreen regularly, compared to 49 percent of those young people who claimed they used protection in 1996. Rigel says "There is clearly a disconnect. The message is out there that sun is bad for you, but people still think they look better and healthier with a tan, Tanning of any kind is more insidious because of the latent nature of skin cancer. It usually doesn't manifest itself until 10 or 20 years after sun exposure, which for most young people might as well be never."

Our modern society, has developed ideas about what one ought to look like regardless of the consequences. Such beauty 'musts' such as long, and sometimes artificial finger nails, have caused irritations and infections. The Board is once again considering regulations about body art, because of the proliferation of tattoo parlors in nearby towns. Tanning salons are ever more popular, nowadays. All of these so-called beauty enhancers are not used without some risk.

The AAD survey also found that people over 35 were more diligent about avoiding sun exposure than were people under that age. Since 1996, these adults reported a 16 percent decrease in the number of sunburns they received. Among those under 18, by contrast, the numbers of people reporting at least one sunburn increased from 52 percent to 61 percent from 1996 to 2003.

- 79 percent of people over 35 reported putting sunscreen on their children and grandchildren.
- Use of tanning salons by those under the age of 25 jumped dramatically, from 8 percent in 1996 to 26 percent in 2003. Women use the salons far more than men.

These findings are extremely worrisome in view of the fact that the incidence of skin cancer is on the rise, Rigel says. "This is the only major cancer that is still increasing, with incidence increasing at 6 percent a year and the death rate rising 2 percent annually."

In 2003, there will be more than 1 million cases of skin cancer diagnosed in the United States, Rigel says. The most common and most easily treated type is basal cell carcinoma, which will affect approximately 900,000 people. There will be approximately 250,000 cases of squamous cell carcinoma, and 91,900 cases of melanoma, which is the most serious form of skin cancer. It is estimated that 7,600 people will die from melanoma in 2003.

Skin cancer is caused by overexposure to the ultraviolet rays of the sun.

"There is no such thing as a safe tan, and we have to change the perception of what a true healthy look is." This, according to Dr. James Spencer, a dermatologist at Mount Sinai School of Medicine.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

The joys of birding from a canoe along the Weir River

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

Recently my husband and I decided to canoe upstream on the Weir River, putting in at Union Street. Recent rains had swollen the river enough to make this a possibility. Driving over, I called out "Stop!" as I caught sight of a white bird sitting on top of one of the goal nets on the high school playing fields. It was shaped like an egret, but didn't look just right for a Snowy Egret. It was a Cattle Egret, a bird that I had never seen in Hingham before. Cattle Egrets frequent uplands and fields rather than marshes, often fields with cattle. This one was in breeding plumage with orange-colored feathers on its head, back and breast.

That was a good start to our bird list for the day. We continued on and put our canoe in beside the Union Street bridge. In spite of its being late morning, we were immediately surrounded by bird song. The loud "Con-ka-reee" song of Red-winged Blackbirds came from all sides as they flew back and forth across the river, displaying their red shoulder epaulets. We also saw a few females that look entirely different. They are like large streaky brown sparrows.

After a short way, Tower Brook came in from the right. A trip for another time. At this point the Weir River becomes the Crooked Meadow River. As we paddled along, we used clippers and a small hand saw to clear away some of the overhanging vegetation. This slowed our progress, making it easier for me to look for birds. A bird flew across our path, looking like a female cardinal, but the shape was not right for a cardinal. Fortunately, the vegetation opened up enough to see a Yellow-billed Cuckoo sitting on a branch. I could even see the yellow bill clasping a very fat green caterpillar.

Moving on, we could hear a Black-capped Chickadee whistling its spring song of "FEE-bee" instead of its signature "Chick-a-dee-dee-dee". A Tufted Titmouse then began chanting its monotonous "Here-here-here" in the distance. The titmouse has a very loud song for such a small bird.

Continuing upstream, we could see The Meadows and other homes as the vegetation opened up. The sound of barking dogs and playing children on the other side of the bushes reminded us that we were not as far from civilization as it seemed. We stopped to eat our picnic lunch out of view of nearby houses. A Gray Catbird entertained us while we ate, singing loudly enough to drown out most other songs. This all-gray bird with a black cap and rusty undertail feathers is a mimic, giving each phrase only once, in contrast to the mockingbird's habit of repeating each call three times. Its distinctive "Meeoow" call removes any doubt as to what bird is calling.

After lunch we continued on toward Free Street. A slight shadow overhead reminded me that I should look up from time to time. Three Double-crested Cormorants were flying over. These birds are often seen in Hingham Harbor "hanging their wings out to dry" while perched on rocks or docks. It is worth checking cormorants carefully to make sure they are not the much less common Glossy Ibis, a similar-looking black bird, but with a distinctive down-curved bill. No glossies this trip.

What is that very plain brown bird? Oh, it is a baby European Starling, already hatched and fledged this year. Starlings are all brown when young, then molt into black feathers with white tips, which wear off over the winter, to produce glossy black adults by breeding season in the spring. They were introduced into this country from Europe.

The sounds of Free Street traffic penetrated through the bushes. After a brief debate about which of the three culverts under the road to go through, we chose the middle one. Getting through successfully against the increased current from the narrowing of the waterway involved propelling ourselves forward by using our hands against the walls. Shortly afterwards we passed the entrance of Fulling Mill Brook. We stayed on Crooked Meadow River until large downed trees blocked our way.

On the return trip we heard the loud, melodic song of Baltimore Orioles. Why is it that a bird with such bright orange and black coloring and such a loud song is often so hard to see? We slowed down going past a lovely landscaped yard, until we finally located the oriole sitting in the top of a bush. A brilliant sight. Another bright, loud bird that is unexpectedly hard to see is the Scarlet Tanager. The song of this red bird with black wings has been described as being like that of a robin with a sore throat. We heard one singing, but never saw it. An Eastern Kingbird flew out from the branch of a tree to catch insects, acting like the flycatcher that it is. The white along the bottom edge of its tail is a dead give-away to its identification. American Robins were hunting worms on the ground.

Looking up, we saw Chimney Swifts flying around. These birds look like cigars with wings. They are not in the same family with swallows, but are similar in many ways. Barn Swallows also flew over from time to time. They have blue backs, orange breasts, and forked tails, and are the only swallows with white spots in their tails.

Farther on, a repeated "QueEEEEP" sound gave away the position of a Great-crested Flycatcher. This is a large flycatcher, a handsome bird with yellow underneath, a rufous tail and a slightly crested look to its head. It nests in tree cavities, often using snakeskins to line their nest. We heard Eastern Towhees and Northern Cardinals as well. Another Yellow-billed Cuckoo called from deep inside the vegetation.

Floating downstream through the Free Street culvert was much easier than going upstream. Shortly after Free Street there is a small lagoon from which a Great Blue Heron rose majestically into the air. Nearby were six adult Canada Geese and two sets of different-sized goslings. An outing for two families, I suspect.

Farther on in a well-vegetated area, we slowed as we heard the sweet song of a Yellow Warbler.

Cattle Egret

We watched as the male and female flitted in and out of the bushes. A Common Yellowthroat, another warbler, called but did not put in an appearance.

Ahead a Common Grackle chased an American Crow. Then a Red-winged Blackbird chased the grackle. Their raucous calls send the message, "Stay away from my nest!" Soon a Blue Jay joined the chorus with its own harsh call.

A telephone wire overhead sported a Mourning Dove. These plump birds have a way of looking like small hawks from a distance. Their call of "oo-AH, coo, coo, coo" is mournful and distinctive, but suggestive of an owl call to some people.

Back to The Meadows area, we could hear and see a Song Sparrow. A second birdcall sounded like a Field Sparrow, but disappeared before I could be sure. Never mind, a bird trip is rarely complete without at least one unidentified bird for the list!

Back at Union Street we climbed out of our canoe feeling privileged to have seen a part of Hingham we had never seen before, with a bird list totaling 27 species. One reason I prefer canoeing to kayaking is that in a canoe, I have a very patient husband who will keep us on track if I suddenly stop paddling to look through my binoculars. As we drove home, we stopped to see if the Cattle Egret was still around. It was walking around the field, collecting insects stirred up by mowing machines, not cattle.

Taking on the Boston accent

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Has anyone ever steered the conversation around so that you had to say "Pahk your cah in Hahvard Yahd" or a similar phrase loaded with "ars" just because they wanted to hear you say it?

Well, John de Nugent, a teacher who plies his trade on something called The Learning Connection, an adult education network out of Providence, R.I., is trying to do something about it.

His three-hour course, titled "The Great Rhode Island Accent Reduction Program," is designed to help put the "ar" back in "car" not only in Rhode Island but all the way back to Boston, where it all started.

"It's not reel smott to tawk with a Rho Dyelinn accent around othaa people," says de Nugent. Jeez, do we really talk that way?

Once he successfully "parks his car in Harvard Yard," I hope that Professor de Nugent will turn his academic talents to one of my pet peeves on the linguistic front.

Until some TV news anchor decided to add a little local color to his broadcasts, I had never heard a northeast storm referred to as a "nor'easter."

Until some TV news anchor decided to add a little local color to his broadcasts, I had never heard a northeast storm referred to as a "nor'easter." Nor'west or sou'east, maybe, but never nor'east.

To my ear, and to the ear of the folklorist, B. A. Botkin, the word has always been pronounced "no'theast," with a long "o" and a soft "th," as in the verb "loathe."

Then, says Botkin, who probably knows more folklore than the folks themselves, we have "no'no'theast" and "sou'sou'theast," but always nor'nor'west and sou'sou'east.

"Writers who wish to apply the local color correctly are urged to study these forms carefully and not slip up, as most of them do, on such simple matters."

Have you got that, Professor de Nugent?

New England should be a fertile field for the study of mispronunciations since most of them came from England in colonial times and never went back. "Pint" for point is one of them.

There's often a difference between the people who live in Boston, Providence, and other large cities and the folks who live in the hinterlands, where change come slowly if at all.

A stranger, looking in on a spelling class in a New Hampshire school, was startled to hear a teacher, her spelling book open before her, ask one of her pupils to spell "caow." The youngster replied, "c-o-w."

"That's right," said the teacher. "Now spell 'caller,' what you wear around your neck, not the person who comes to see you in the evening." The kid spelled "c-o-l-l-a-r."

As you can see, Professor de Nugent has a full plate, if he wants to take it.

Village design is out of character

TO THE EDITOR:

On Tuesday, June 17, 2003, the Cohasset Selectmen voted to issue bids for the Village revitalization project based on designs by the Waterfield Group. The bid specifies concrete sidewalks in the downtown area and calls for the installation of buried conduits for the utility wires. The wires will not, however, be buried due to cost limitations.

To obtain a feeling for what this revitalization will look like, one should take a short ride to Front Street in Scituate. Utility poles feature prominently in that design, as they will in Cohasset. Look also at the concrete sidewalks. Note the cracking and heaving of the concrete, the weeds growing in the cracks and between the concrete and the curbing. Pay attention to where the concrete has been patched with asphalt.

The people of Cohasset deserve better for their Village. We urge the Selectmen to postpone any letting of a contract for a design based on the work of the Waterfield Group and to appoint a select group of citizens to advise them on a design which would be in keeping with the character of the Town.

Bulger hearing provides some budgetary distraction

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

The way last week will be remembered was best captured in a moment in the House chamber, as representatives gathered for what felt like segment four million of the wait for the budget.

In the nearly empty chamber, as the Speaker awaited the chance to gavel the House into another three-hour wait, the voice of Bill Bulger could be plainly heard, on the radio from Washington, denying he ever tried to a punish a state trooper for attempting to intercept Bulger's notorious brother.

Everyone in the Statehouse was riveted. The budget was announced to be ready for passage on Wednesday, and then Wednesday was spent learning it wasn't as ready as advertised. So Thursday came, and now the whole building had something to do while it waited. Something strange.

And strange it was to see Massachusetts' tiny political universe transported and put on display in Washington.

The best untold story of the day no doubt was how Howie Carr came to trump the politicians in the kind of camera angle competition he loves to lambaste. However he came by his seat, it gave him the chance to smirk, smile and raise his visibility as Bulger stepped carefully through his answers. Carr sat behind Bulger's right shoulder, Robert Connolly behind his left. The two were once brothers in the anti-Bulger fraternity at the Boston Herald, but Connolly saw the light or went over to the dark side, depending on your perspective, and now is Bulger's chief press aide. It made for a strange rendition of the old "devil and angel" shoulder debate, with the roles ambiguous.

The day was rife with such spectacles. Bulger was questioned extensively by Stephen Lynch, who succeeded Bulger in the South Boston/Back Bay Senate seat Bulger occupied for 26 years. Lynch entered the Legislature by beating William Bulger Jr. US Rep. William Delahunt had plenty of questions too, but first he had to disclose that his campaign treasurer is Bulger's lawyer. Delahunt was tougher on the FBI than Bulger. Maybe that was appropriate – the committee's investigation, after all, is about the FBI's misconduct, not Bulger's.

Attorney General Thomas Reilly was left underwhelmed. Bulger said in his opening statement to the committee that "one political foe has made the claim that I have somehow made a choice of my brother over my civic duties and my public responsibilities. There is no basis in fact for such an assertion." The foe was Reilly, who was booed at the recent Democrat convention for his public campaign calling on Bulger to quit.

And strange it was to see Massachusetts' tiny political universe transported and put on display in Washington.

But Reilly knows the people doing the booing haven't chosen a winning gubernatorial candidate for 20 years. He knows what the UMass president has come to represent, and Reilly says he doesn't like it. Reilly knows Bulger represents the past, and Reilly obviously hopes to personify the future.

Oh, yes, they did produce a compromise budget at the end of the day.

• Budget compromise reached quickly, details released — The budget headed for Gov. Mitt Romney's desk totals $22.3 million. It contains no new broad-based taxes, but would extract about $400 million in new revenues through increases in fees and fines. It also contains about $400 million in one-time revenue diversions, often criticized as "gimmicks" by some of the same leaders who grudgingly adopted them. The possibility of a tax hike this fall is still raised sometimes in Statehouse corridor conversations.

Some of the controversial policy decisions made by the Senate were left out of the conference report. The budget is silent, for example, on a statewide smoking ban passed by senators. It does not contain any exemptions to MCAS testing; House members had passed a provision exempting special needs students. The document does expand the MCAS test appeals process for special ed students. The "Pacheco Law" that makes it difficult to privatize state services was untouched by the conference report. No moratorium on charter schools is contained in the budget.

The highest-visibility policy change in this budget is the repeal of the 1998 Clean Elections Law, which legislative leaders have been changing, underfunding or ignoring for years on the grounds it is badly drafted, unworkable and unaffordable. Repeal sets up an interesting choice for Romney, who talks often about the will of the voters.

The budget contains deep cuts in many social and human services programs, and about $170 million in reductions in local aid, but those cuts have been coming for so long that inclusion in the final budget did not come as a surprise. The compromise budget did bring some cheer to health advocates. They praised the restoration of health coverage for 36,000 Medicaid recipients, the continuation of the Prescription Advantage program to help seniors pay for medication, and full funding of the anticipated costs of free hospital care to indigents next year.

The Quinn Bill, which provides increased pay to officers who earn college degrees but has been criticized as funding low-quality classes that don't return the taxpayers' investment, is substantially changed in the budget. New officers will be eligible for a sharply curtailed version of the perk.

The budget consolidates power in the judicial system in the hands of the Boston Municipal Court, almost exactly the opposite of what Gov. Romney proposed. But many of his reorganizations, for example in the Health and Human Services agencies, were adopted.

Despite the daily talk of historic state finance problems, the compromise budget increases spending overall by about 2 percent, just about the same amount budget writers anticipate revenues to increase next fiscal year.

• Advocates: cell phone limits would mean safer roads — Massachusetts would become the second state in the nation to ban hands-on cell phone use while driving under legislation unveiled in front of the Statehouse. Also, junior operators would not be able to use cells in any form during their first six months on the road.

• Nurses say ratio law will save lives — One in three nurses knows of a case where a patient died because the ratio of patients to nurses was too high, the Massachusetts Nurses Association said. Nurses called for the passage of legislation requiring hospitals to get the ratio down to 5 to 1, or even lower depending on the care involved.

• Death penalty will be studied by Romney panel — Gov. Romney plans to form a commission to examine death penalty policy. The governor ran on a pledge to restore capital punishment, but is searching for a way to come up with a bill that will enjoy broad support in the Legislature, which has been moving in the anti-death penalty direction in recent years. The major new element of this inquiry is likely to be ways in which the law would call for cutting-edge forensics to be used as a check against wrongful conviction and execution. No one testified in favor of the death penalty at a hearing earlier this year.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE $22.3 BILLION FISCAL 2004 BUDGET (H 4004)

House 118-37, Senate 32-6, accepted the conference committee version of a $22.3 billion fiscal 2004 state budget that does not raise taxes but raises millions of dollars in fees and makes major cuts in many areas including human service and education programs, education aid, local aid and higher education. Other provisions include restoring Medicaid benefits for 36,000 unemployed adults; $96.4 million for the Prescription Advantage drug program for senior citizens; requiring state employees earning over $35,000 per year to pay 20 percent instead of 15 percent of their health insurance premiums and requiring newly hired employees to pay 25 percent; and repeal of the voter-approved Clean Elections Law that provides public funding for candidates who agree to strict fundraising and spending limits. Supporters said the package is an on-time, fiscally responsible and balanced one that makes tough choices in light of the state's fiscal crisis and would close the state's estimated $3 billion budget deficit. They noted it includes major reforms and makes historic changes to the structure and operation of state government. Various opponents cited a variety of reasons for voting against the budget including the inclusion of millions of dollars in increased fees; drastic cuts in human service programs, education and local aid instead of raising taxes; excluding Republicans from having major input into the drafting of the conference committee report; technical and drafting errors in the report that were made in the rush to complete work on it; inclusion of unnecessary spending; and reforms that do not go far enough in making major changes in the structure and operation of state government. The House and Senate later gave final approval to the budget and sent it to Gov. Romney. (A "Yea" vote is for the budget. A "Nay" vote is against it).

POSTPONE CONSIDERATION OF FISCAL 2004 STATE BUDGET (H 4004)

House 37-117, rejected a motion to postpone consideration of the conference committee version of a $22.3 billion fiscal 2004 state budget for three days. Supporters of postponement said that legislators have only had a few hours to read this new version of the budget and argued that it is irresponsible to vote on a $22.3 billion package without being allowed to read and understand it. They noted that the document is loaded with drafting and technical errors and should not be rushed through the House. Opponents of postponement said it is important for the legislature to act in a timely fashion in order to approve the budget and send it to the governor who can sign it and make his vetoes prior to the beginning of the fiscal year on July 1. (A "Yea" vote is for postponement. A "Nay" vote is against postponement).

FAILURE TO REPORT A FIRE (S 1281)

Senate 39-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill imposing up to a two-year prison sentence and/or $1000 fine on anyone who starts, causes or maintains a fire that endangers lives or property and fails to try to extinguish the fire, warn people of it or promptly notify the police or fire department. The measure exempts the requirement to try to extinguish the fire and warn about it if either action would place the person at substantial risk. Supporters said this fills a gap in current law and makes a person responsible for failure to take action that could save lives and property. They pointed to the tragic 1999 Worcester fire in which six firefighters died while searching a warehouse in vain for two people who started a fire by knocking over a candle and then fled after unsuccessfully attempting to extinguish the blaze. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

Senator Hedlund: Y
Representative Bradley: Y

VOLUNTEER FIREFIGHTERS (S 1292)

Senate 39-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill increasing the membership of the Massachusetts Fire Service Commission from six to seven and requiring that one member be a call/volunteer firefighter. A call/volunteer firefighter is one whose primary occupation is not that of a full-time firefighter. The commission's powers include appointment of a state fire marshal; regulation of the operation of the marshal's office and development of standards for fire investigation training and certification. Supporters said that 45 percent of the state's firefighters are call/volunteer ones and argued that they should have some representation on this important fire-related board. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

Senator Hedlund: Y
Representative Bradley: Y

LEADERSHIP SALARIES (H 3743)

Senate 28-10, gave final approval to and sent to Gov. Romney a bill allowing the House and Senate, through their operating rules, to unilaterally set the bonus pay, above the $53,381 base salary, of their committee chairs and other majority and minority members in leadership positions. The House gave final approval to the bill without a roll call vote. Under current law, any bonus pay proposal must be filed as a separate bill and then go through the regular legislative process and sent to the governor who can sign it or veto it. The House and Senate also adopted an emergency preamble that provides that the new law, if signed by the governor, take effect immediately, rather than in 90 days. Supporters said this fair and reasonable change would simply allow the House and Senate to manage their own in-house affairs without interference from the governor and noted the state's chief executive has always been able to set the salaries of his staff without any legislative interference. Opponents said the bill would destroy the system of checks and balances by effectively giving the powerful speaker and senate president the ability to quickly increase the pay of favored legislators below the radar screen and without public scrutiny or a public hearing. They argued the measure is outrageous and poorly timed in light of the state's budget crisis, layoffs of state and local employees and drastic program cuts. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill allowing the Legislature to unilaterally set bonus pay. A "Nay" vote is against the bill).

obtain the data you are getting for us," he said.

Bobo also commended the school system, "whose management and staff have provided the wherewithal to foster such a program in our midst," and the parents, who have "supported their children's efforts in public service for environmental outreach."

Environmental Secretary and Cohasset resident, Ellen Roy Herzfelder was also in attendance. Sharing fond memories of days spent on the beach when she was a child, Roy Herzfelder holds a special place in her heart for the project. "This is my home town and this is my love — the ocean," she said.

Roy Herzfelder cut the ceremonial ribbon, and was first to enter the building after its official inauguration. After a complete transformation, the historic building has been restored to provide an ideal setting for research.

With beautifully refinished wood floors and fresh paint on the walls, the center almost feels like stepping into someone's home, if you can overlook the test tubes and computer mapping station.
